SCRAPPLE.

A Column of Nonsense.

The other day when we were going over to Avery Duvall's to buy a Buick car for our wife a man stopped us and asked us why they call a house for an aeroplane a hangar. He said his wife had asked him and he said he would find out for her and he just had to do it. We told him we would let him know so we thought we would go over and ask Ed Davis. We have lots of fast friends in North Platte and we consider Ed the fastest so we went in when he smiled at us and we asked him. Ed said he thought they must have had some good reason as the only kind of a hangar he ever heard of was the man who hangs people. We said maybe they hang the aeroplanes in the hangar and Ed said he didn't think they did as they have wheels on the under side where horses have feet and they don't hang horses. We said wheels were not always on the underside but were sometimes on or near the top. Ed said he never saw an aeroplane with wheels on the top and looked real serious so we said we guess we never had either. Just then Ed's East End friend came in and we asked him and he said he thought it was named by a foreigner who didn't know about English just as a foreigner must have named horse-radish which in English has nothing to do with either horses or radishes. Ed said "That's so" and we did too. Then we said we had heard of a coat hanger and we asked Ed if he thought an aeroplane looked enough like a coat hanger so they would call it that and he said it was the building that was called a hangar and not the plane and we said "Is that so?" and Ed said "That's so," and we got mad and told Ed a few things which his East End friend said we should not have told him and as Ed seemed to take it all right we got a little bolder and when we said some people didn't know where the wheels were Ed got mad and when he said for us to get out of there or he would cuckoo some one we got out about as fast as we could. And we went over and told the haunted husband and now we know.
