The Better Part

By MURIEL LEE

(60, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

Love and charity had played important parts in the career of Mark Wallace, and he had entered into the sentiments of the same with earnestness and faith. Upon only one woman had he bestowed the fervor of a steadfast affection, had basked in the sunlight of her smiles for a brief period, and then she had fitted like some beautiful bird and he was left desolate.

Esther Wayne had been very friendly to Wallace, and had been of a more venturesome nature he might never have lost her. Unexpectedly Miss Wayne had become heiress to a fortune. It took her away for a month, settling up an estate. In the meantime extravagant stories of her wealth came to the ears of Wallace. She and her young brother, Sidney, were to return and build a fifty thousand dollar mansion, rumor said. It placed the Waynes on a pedestal of social and moneyed prestige that fairly daunted Wallace. He was poor, obscure—how could he ever hope to win this rare paragon of beauty and fortune. He decided that it would be best for his peace of mind to go away and try to forget her.

This in fact he never did, but he was somewhat buoyed up by his success in securing a position in the city at three times his former country town salary. He made steadfast progress and this was well, for it took his mind away from sorrow and despair. He settled down to a quiet, steady good life and sought in kindly deeds a compensation for the loss of love.

If he had only known it, Esther Wayne had come back to her native town hoping to find him there, and disappointed and more than that when she learned that he had left the place permanently. It was natural that she should decide that he had never cared for her outside of casual acquaintance. For a long time Esther cherished her own dream of affection, then sought to banish its memories and married a man, Eric Danvers, who sought her only for her fortune, dissipated nearly half of it and left her a widow at the end of a year.

Esther had gone through an experience that ages the soul, and the old home and old friends too had grown distasteful to her. She removed to the city where Sidney, then only ten years of age, could receive the benefits of a superior education. They made their home with a family who accommodated a few chosen boarders. The son of the family, at table one evening, made a remark that suddenly opened the flood gates of memory with Esther in a strangely acute way.

"I've got the happiest man in the world for my boss, they tell me," spoke the young man. "He is the manager of our firm and I heard his history today. He has been with the house for five years and his name is Mark Wallace."

Esther was startled and a flutter of emotion crossed her face, but she was unobserved by those present. She was eager to hear more.

"He's the friend of everybody in the establishment and jolly as can be—always a word of cheer from the old bachelor, as they call him. One of the fellows at one desk told me that Mr. Wallace was disappointed in love years ago, and that he has never looked at a woman since his first love disappointed him. I just tell you this because he doesn't act like the forlorn pining lover with a broken heart. He just pulled himself together and sought a new line of interest—being good to others. They say that from the first day he came to the store he faithfully put aside exactly half of his earnings. Every Saturday night he starts out to spend this surplus, dresses up in the most commonplace way, goes down into the slums and hunts for poor families in trouble, neglected children, the sick, the weak, the unfortunate, makes a system and a business of it. He has compensated for the loss of the love of one woman by cherishing that of the whole world."

Esther managed to see Wallace several times during the next month, but always at a distance. He had improved with the years. The beneficent expression of his calm, yet pleasant face told of an unselfish and a sacrificing soul.

There opened up no way that brought them together, although Esther looked for that welcome materialization. Then her constant thoughts of Wallace were broken in upon by an occurrence that distracted her. Sidney Wayne did not return from school one day, and no trace could be secured of him. The police were satisfied that a band of city ruffians had abducted and were holding him in captivity to force his wealthy sister to ransom him.

Esther was heartstruck with anxiety and dread. She was mourning over the new trouble that had come to her, when one afternoon she heard welcome tones in the hall below her room and she rushed down stairs to fold her lost brother in her loving arms.

And with him was Mark Wallace, and soon Esther knew that through his acquaintance with the poor and lowly there had eventuated a clue to the whereabouts of the kidnapped boy.

"I have always shared my love with you, Wallace," confessed Esther a month later when reunion had brought a mutual happy understanding. "Let me now share your life of good deeds, and hand in hand, and soul to soul forget the mistakes of the past."

YOUR RED CROSS

The American Red Cross, by its Congressional charter, is officially designated:

To furnish volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of armies in time of war, in accordance with the conventions of Geneva.

To act in matters of voluntary relief and as a medium of communication between the American people and their Army and Navy.

To continue and carry on a system of national and international relief in time of peace and to apply the same in mitigating the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, fire, floods and other great calamities.

To devise and carry on measures for preventing these causes of suffering.

FIRST AID TRAINING TO MEN AND WOMEN

American Red Cross Is Teaching Hundreds of Thousands Life-Saving Methods.

The purpose of instruction in First Aid to the injured offered by the American Red Cross is to train men and women to administer First Aid treatment promptly and intelligently when emergencies demand it. First Aid treatment is not intended to take the place of a physician's service. A surgeon should always be summoned as a precautionary measure where there is an injury of any consequence, but when one cannot be secured a few minutes' delay may mean a fatality. In such a case a person trained in First Aid is invaluable not only to the individual, but through him to the community in which he lives.

There is perhaps no way of ascertaining the number of deaths or serious disabilities which result from lack of proper safeguards or prompt emergency treatment. It is safe to assert they number thousands daily. There can be no doubt that the application of First Aid methods to each case would immeasurably lighten the country's toll of suffering and death.

The dissemination of First Aid training and information has already produced a far-reaching and beneficial influence in the prevention of accidents on railroads, in mines and in great industrial concerns.

The benefit of a widespread knowledge of First Aid in the event of a great disaster, such as a train wreck, an explosion, an earthquake, etc., is obvious. Laymen who have had First Aid training can render efficient assistance. Many lives may depend upon such emergency care.

Red Cross First Aid work includes (1) the formation and conduct, through Red Cross chapters, of classes for instruction in accident prevention and First Aid to the injured among men and women in all communities and in every industry; (2) the introduction of courses of instruction in high schools and colleges.

The Red Cross is prepared to supply First Aid books and equipment at reasonable prices.

Every person in this country able to do so should, in his own interest, receive Red Cross First Aid instruction. Information about the course and instruction classes may be had at the nearest chapter headquarters.

RED CROSS EXTENDS RELIEF TO POLAND

More than $5,000,000 has been spent by the American Red Cross in aiding the stricken people of Poland. The organization has nursed the sick, fed the starving, clothed the naked, sheltered the homeless, schooled the children and cared for the orphans there. It has conducted a relentless fight against typhus, cholera and other terrible diseases. So today millions of men and women in that resurrected nation speak in grateful appreciation of "The Greatest Mother in the World."

Nearly 200 American Red Cross workers are now engaged in relief activities in Poland. Four large relief bases are in operation and eleven mobile units are in the field. During the last twelve months this organization was largely instrumental in the re-establishment of a million refugees at the cost for general relief of more than $1,000,000. Last winter one-half million war orphans were aided materially, and since then a series of large orphanages have been established to give them permanent care.

But for American Red Cross aid, of details of Poland declared recently, millions of people in that country would have perished of disease, exposure or starvation the last eighteen months. And the work there must be kept up for another year.
