TELLS OF ARMY WORK IN STATE

Salvation for Men and Women Found in Cleanliness Says Brigadier.

Omaha, Nebraska. The aims and purposes of the Salvation Army, as they have been followed during the past forty years of his association with it, were recently outlined by Brigadier William Andrews, newly appointed Chief Divisional Officer for Iowa and Nebraska.

"The Salvation Army advocates soup, soap and Salvation," said Brigadier Andrews. "The very first thing a man, who is down, needs is something to sustain the inner man; the next thing he needs is to be made clean, from this point the matter of winning him back to respectability is made easy."

"The Salvation Army knows of no case in its history where the heart of either man or woman has not been reached by these methods. It knows of no degree of despair or degeneracy where the subject may not be lifted up and out of his or her condition by Christian love."

"The Salvation Army is first of all a religious institution, seeking to win the souls of men; its second prime purpose is service to humanity. This second purpose takes us to the farthest points of the compass, into sixty-four countries and the square deal is preached to men in thirty-two different tongues."

"Each of the sixteen major activities of the Salvation Army was born of an urgent need which the Army found it within their province to supply. Take for instance, the Salvation Army industrial homes. In these homes, by means of waste material and waste men we obtain two tangible results, first the support of the man and the retention of his self respect. Second by sorting rags, repairing old furniture, clothing, shoes and by caining chairs the poor are supplied with needed articles at a song."

Then, again, the Salvation Army found that in all populated centers throughout the country, especially in winter time, there are great numbers of homeless men out of work. This was more particularly so when the country was wet. These men would float around like driftwood on the water, without money or friends; human derelicts so to speak. We found that we could help in the regeneration of these men most effectively by establishing Salvation Army lodging houses where for a dime or fifteen cents a man might obtain a bed, a bath and a place where he might launder his soiled clothes to begin the next day anew. In many of these hotels in cities like Chicago and New York and Des Moines, coffee and rolls were furnished without extra cost.

Annually through its religious open-air and other services the Salvation Army reclaims approximately 60,000 potential Bolsheviks.

The Salvation Army early in its existence found out that it was comparatively easy to influence girls to change their lives from lives of shame but that these girls when left in their old surroundings of commercialized vice soon drifted back to a kind-hearted Salvation Army lassie opened up her home to the former inmates of the home house district in London. This was the beginning of our present maternity work and now in the United States only, we care for 6,000 child mothers and their babies in our Maternity homes, one of which is located in Des Moines.

Post war conditions have not lessened but greatly increased the demands on the Salvation Army for aid. We have presented these to our State Advisory Board composed of Hon. A. L. Sutton, Chairman, H. R. Bowen, Joseph Rapp, Dr. Floyd Clark, Dr. S. McClenaghan, John W. Gamble, Allen H. Tukey, Walter W. Head, Hon. Ed P. Smith, Robert S. Trimble, A. C. Scott, Hon. John L. Kennedy, Dr. E. C. Henry, Robert H. Manley, Hon. Charles Leslie, Hon. W. G. Sears.

INTEREST IN OLD MANSES

Traveler Finds Atmosphere of Romance Surrounds Picturesque Abodes of Eastern States.

Vacation pilgrims traveling by automobile or trolley or pursuing the less exhilarating but more tranquil joy of exploring country highways and byways on foot or drawn by some faithful old Dobbin have singled out about every structure or locally famous inn, song, story and history. Wayside inns, taverns, military headquarters, churches and the birthplaces of celebrities have all come in for their share of worship.

There is, however, one species of landmark which seems to have escaped the special attention of those interested in relics of our pious forefathers—the old manses of New England and the middle states. The rectory or parsonage of today was known in the time of our ancestors by the old Scotch title of manse.

At first thought it might seem that no more particular interest would hover about these ancient manses than about any of the picturesque homes of an earlier century. Indeed it is not so much in outward appearance that they are to be set apart, but because of an intangible atmosphere of sacred romance surrounding them—invisible "clouds of glory" trailing back to the days when the manse played a most important part in the life of the community. Furthermore each of these old ministerial dwellings has a story all of its own. It was by accident I discovered this, and now whenever happy chance takes me to a new locality the first place I hunt up is the manse.—Chicago Daily News.

In Time of Need

By ALVAH J. GARTH

(© 1926, Western Newspaper Union)

Morris Davenal stood spellbound viewing a scene that seemed so lovely, yet filmy, that he almost deemed himself under a delusion. He had been camping on the banks of a river, occupying a rude board shanty, and had cut across what seemed to be the extensive grounds of a great, gloomy mansion. At the edge of a glade a fitting figure had crossed his range of vision.

It was nearly midnight, and the moonlight filtered down in a silvery flood and showed a form girlish, full of natural grace, and a face the outlines of which were perfect. She drew within the shadow of a towering elm tree and stood motionless, her ear bent, her gaze fixed.

She made a gesture of keen disappointment as no one appeared. Beyond the tree a man, evidently a worker about the grounds, suddenly came into view. He halted, applied a whistle to his lips and blew an echoing trill. The girl hurried in the direction of the house to be confronted by a second man, past middle age, who regarded her with sternness, almost anger.

"You will not be warned!" Davenal heard him say, and there was the venom of menace in his tones. "Please stand aside," spoke the girl in icy tones. "I will return to my room."

"And stay there, if you are wise," observed the man. "You are trying to play me false. Be careful—you know the penalty!"

Davenal delivered a deep breath like one seeing an entrancing picture fade into nothingness. The scene remained imprinted on his memory all the way to his temporary home near the river. He entered the dilapidated old shack and sat for an hour lost in meditation. Finally he aroused himself and walked over to a cupboard.

"Again!" he muttered, as its shelves came into view, and the puzzled exclamation expressed his wonderment that, for the second time within twenty-four hours, someone had entered the place and had made away with food in the cupboard.

Davenal threw himself on his couch, but memory of the fair girl in the moonlight remained for a long time. He finally slumbered, to rouse up at early daylight as a groan disturbed him. It was repeated, apparently from an attic overhead. Davenal went to a corner where cleats were nailed along the wall, ascended these and glanced about the confined space under the roof.

A human form was stretched out upon a heap of old rags, moving uneasily, with closed eyes. Davenal fancied this must be the despoiler of his food supply. He noticed that one foot of the intruder was swathed in a bandage. He touched his arm. Instantly the other, a young man of presentable appearance, although he looked haggard and distressed, awoke.
