Silk and Calico

By GENEVIEVE ULMER
(©, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Why, Nellie, you are a confirmed window shopper! Here I have my arms full of bundles, and outside of a spool of thread you have not bought a single thing."

"Because the spool of thread was all I needed," replied Mrs. Nellie Wharton cheerily.

Elsie Brandt, her married sister, looked thoughtful and unsatisfied. She had come to the city from the home of her husband and mother at Cleton, visiting Nellie for the first time since her marriage. Elsie had been somewhat disappointed to find the bride of a year living in a cheap, modest three-room flat, palpably economical in household outlay, her husband a traveling salesman from home most of the time, and, although she had joined her guest in making the rounds of the stores and had looked up and admired the contents of the display windows, Nellie had made one insignificant purchase.

"And look at the dream of a skirt, Nellie!" enthused Elsie. "Marked low, too. Why don't you buy it? Your dress looks positively shabby and I do believe it is one you had before the wedding."

"That is true, Elsie," responded Nellie, "but it will have to do for a spell yet. You see, Ronald and I are living on a settled basis of expenditure, and I have to be careful."

When Elsie Brandt went home she aired her suppressed grievances fully. Nellie had not told her much about her own domestic affairs, appeared happy as a lark, but Elsie was impressed with the idea that Ronald was either a poor provider or earning very little money.

"I declare! about all Nellie has is the commonest dress goods, but I noticed in a wardrobe some fancy shirts of her husband that must have cost a lot."

"Calico wife, silk husband, eh?" suggested her mother.

"Come to think of it, I fancy you have hit the nail on the head," observed Elsie's husband. "I happened across Ronald Wharton in Belleville last week. He was rolling by in a de luxe automobile in charge of a liveried chauffeur. Dressed up to the nines. Actually he was a sort of fashion-plate—a pink of perfection as to attire and makeup. I won't say foppish, Ronald is tasteful and knows how to wear good clothes, but doesn't stint himself, that is sure."

Uncommunicative Nellie might have enlightened her carping relatives had she been present. The fact was that her husband was following a rather particular line of business calling for neatness, precision and effect. He was no poseur, but he appreciated and valued the influence of personal impressions. Ronald was traveling for a publishing concern putting out high class sets of books, and catered only to families of fashion and wealth. Whenever he made a town, as the saying is, he followed selected social leaders. His immaculate attire and naturally gentlemanly ways won recognition.

Just after he married Nellie the business house he had been with for many years removed to distant headquarters and he looked about for a new connection.

"It means putting a thousand miles between ourselves and your family folk," he told Nellie, "if I go with them. To break into a new line will be experimental, but I believe I have an offer worth working out."

He told Nellie all about the book selling proposition. It would take about all the ready cash he had to equip himself, rightly and stand traveling expenses for 60 days ahead. The commissions tendered were very generous, and if he met with any pretentious measure of success there was an assurance of an income treble that he had received in his old position.

Heart and soul wise, prudent, calculating Nellie entered into the proposition of the hour. She scaled down household expenses to a narrow minimum. She declared she was outfitted completely as to attire for a full year ahead. If sister Elsie had been with Nellie when she assisted her husband in getting ready for the road, she would have been fairly appalled. Handsome of face and well built, brisk of manner and naturally graceful of poise, her adorable better half indeed knew how to wear good clothes, and Nellie insisted on his providing himself with the very best.

It was six months after her first visit to the city that Elsie wrote her sister that both she and her mother had arranged to spend a week with her.

"I have made over two of my old gowns," Elsie told her mother. "They will fill in some of the dreariness of Nellie's wardrobe."

"Yes, poor child! and I am going to cheer her up with a present of fifty dollars for a winter coat," added Mrs. Dubois.

Ronald was at home in a new and larger flat when the visitors arrived, spruce, jolly, delightfully habited as usual, which Mrs. Dubois secretly resented until Nellie burst into the room to welcome her.

Elsie stared at the marvel of elegance and luxury. The reward of economy, sacrifice and patience had come richly to those two, and when the story of the same came out Elsie realized that there was no further need of Nellie continuing to be "a window shopper!"

SALE OF HOGS.

On Saturday, Oct. 23 at Lexington, on the Sale Pavilion, we will sell as classy an offering of Poland Chinas as will go through any sale ring this year.

We have studied the hog business from a practical farmers standpoint for 20 years and have spared no effort possible in developing that type.

The Judge at the County Fair said I had a distinct large type with uniformity, smoothness and quality not found in many herds.

We appreciated the compliment most because all our winners and 27 of the 28 head shown by us were of our own breeding.

From our herd of 200 head we will select 15 fall and 15 spring boar pigs including the winners. We will also include 10 sows with litters and 10 open fall gilts, and 10 stock shoats. Come, buy them at your own price. For further particulars send for a catalog to

J. O. ANDERSON & SONS.

Having been asked by a number of voters of Lincoln County, to run for County Commissioner from the Third District by petition, I have consented to allow my name to be placed on the ballot and will appreciate any support given me. If elected I will devote all the time necessary to carry on the business of Lincoln County and will do the best I can to give it good service.
