Beads in the Levant.

Beads are more necessary than bread to the Levantine. Men, women and children wear and carry beads to ward off ill luck. Even the horses and donkeys have strands of beads about their necks "to baffle the evil eye" and the long horns of the work oxen are decorated with blue and white beads to keep them from falling prey to disease.

In Athens, Constantinople, Tiflis, Smyrna and other cities of the Levant men of all classes carry short strands of bead beads which they play with while walking in the street, riding in street cars and trains, just as nervous in the West finger their watch chains. Bead shops abound everywhere in the larger cities and general stores and market stalls sell them in the smaller places. Peddlers hawk them in the streets everywhere.

Wallpaper.

Old wallpaper will often look like new if a new border is put at the top of the room. This will change the color scheme also if desired. If one of the up-to-date cut-out borders is used the average person can put it on. If a paperhanger is employed a saving is made by cutting out the border one's self, thus saving the paperhanger's time. A good sticking paste for heavy papers can be made of eight parts of rye flour to one part water, adding three more parts of boiling water and a little powdered resin. It pays to patch a soiled or torn bit of wallpaper, as a neat patch is not noticeable.

Uncovered Ancient Grave.

While excavations were being made on a small conical hill near Dolphinton station, England, in preparation for the foundation for a monument, the workmen came upon an irregularly shaped stone measuring about four feet four inches square and six inches thick, which was found to be covering ancient human remains in their place of sepulcher. Flange stones about four inches thick line the grave, which measures three feet nine inches by two feet by two feet. The stones are recognized as having been quarried locally. The grave was situated only about two feet six inches from the surface, and the deceased person had evidently been interred with legs drawn up. The stones have been replaced.

SALE OF HOGS.

On Saturday, Oct. 23 at Lexington, in the Sale Pavilion, we will sell as classy an offering of Poland Chinas as will go through any sale ring this year.

We have studied the hog business from a practical farmers standpoint for 20 years and have spared no effort possible in developing that type.

The judge at the County Fair said I had a distinct large type with uniformity, smoothness and quality not found in many herds.

We appreciated the compliment most because all our winners and 27 of the 28 head shown by us were of own breeding.

From our herd of 200 head we will select 15 fall and 15 spring boar pigs including the winners. We will also include 10 sows with litters and 10 open fall gilts, and 10 stock shoats. Come, buy them at your own price. For further particulars send for a catalog to

WORMS

Worms are a common and destructive enemy of live stock. They undermine the health of the animals leaving them easily susceptible to disease. Their effect is often mistaken for hog cholera.

Borrowed Plumage

In serious family council Joel Talbott, his wife and the daughter of the house, Ruth, discussed the important subject of the marriage of the son and brother, Waldron, for two years manager of a small wholesale mercantile house in the city.

"Miss Arline Burt," spoke Joel Talbott—"a pretty name."

"And pretty herself," volunteered Ruth spontaneously. "Have you seen her pictures, father?"

"I am about to show them to you," interrupted Mrs. Talbott with a certain severe dignity that was rather ominous. "Waldron has sent us four—a sort of goddess of the season series," and Mr. Talbott regarded the speaker a trifle uneasily, for his wife's tones were tinged with something of sarcasm and bitterness. He wondered why, and was soon enlightened. An envelop containing four photographs was handed to him. He inspected them with curiosity and admiration and made the sprightly remark:

"Pretty as a picture, isn't she?"

"That is a question," remarked Mrs. Talbott rather snappishly. "I am not the woman to criticize or interfere in my son's private affairs, but I am bound to think of his welfare."

"Why, what are you talking about, Martha?" interrogated her husband in vague surprise.

"If you have eyes, can't you see for yourself?" challenged Mrs. Talbott. "Those four pictures tell the tale, don't they?"

"I think she is the most charmingly dressed being I ever looked upon," said Ruth.

"Why, yes," nodded Mr. Talbott approvingly.

"Oh! you do?" flared forth the wife and mother. "And let me ask, have you considered what those clothes must cost? Why, the girl simply has the latest and costliest gowns that Paris can make."

"Well, even so," suggested the tolerant Mr. Talbott, "she's fitted out for a whole year, isn't she?"

"Yes, and oh! how I would like to see those lovely dresses," cried Ruth.

Mrs. Talbott was for writing at once to Waldron, exhorting him to think twice before he took to himself a ruinously extravagant wife. There her husband set his foot down hard. It was not their province to interfere in the heart affairs of Waldron. Perhaps he was wedding an heiress who could afford to wear what she liked. But this idea Mrs. Talbott scouted utterly by alluding to a letter written in the past by Waldron, in which he had stated that his fiancée was poor, worked for her living, but was good as gold, and would make him a helpful, economical wife.

"Economical!" shrugged Mrs. Talbott, and looked desperate.

"A sister-in-law to be proud of, anyway!" whispered Ruth to herself.

"I don't blame Waldron for falling in love with such a dream of a beauty," soliloquized the old man.

In a couple of weeks the news came informing the family of the wedding. It was a modest, unpretentious affair.

The happy wedded pair were to come to the Talbott home for a week and due preparations were made to receive them, although Mrs. Talbott went about her duties under protest. She feared that the bride was likely to appear as a capricious, over-dressed creature, vain and extravagant, a sort of human doll, with finery and display the leading characteristics of her shallow nature.

It was upon a Tuesday that the wedded pair were expected. Ruth, at the gate on the tip of expectation looking for them, was surprised to see a cab drive up in front of the house discharging a single passenger, a plump, but neatly dressed lady with a suit case, whom she immediately recognized as her sister-in-law. Arline was wondrously pretty and graceful and there was no affectation, but eager, pleased delight as she was welcomed by Ruth and her mother.

"Waldron had some business to attend to at Wyndham," explained Arline, "and will be on with the trunks tomorrow. How homelike and cozy it is here. Mother, dear, let me help around until Waldron comes, won't you?"

She reappeared from her room clad in a simple gingham gown, wearing no jewelry but her wedding ring, and presenting not the slightest trace of artificiality. Mrs. Talbott was disarmed by her simple, sensible ways, but Ruth awaited the arrival of those trunks with joyful anticipations.

"There certainly is no flash and glitter about her," admitted Mrs. Talbott to her husband. "She seems anxious and pleased to fall right into our home-spun ways and help all she can."

"I never was so disappointed in my life!" pouted Ruth to girl friends the next day, when the expected treasure house, the trunk, arrived. "Why, I've got as pretty a gingham frock and a pink organdie and a white lawn as she has."

"Daintily but economical," voted Mrs. Talbott, and blurted out the indications of magnificence the pictures had fixed in their minds.

"Oh! did you think all that finery belonged to me?" smiled Arline. "Indeed, no! You see, I was working for a garment house as camera girl. That is, I posed for their fashion plates in their newest and finest frocks."

"Arline needs no gay plumage to make her prettier than she is!" declared Waldron.

"She certainly does not!" said his father admiringly, and with enthusiasm.

Vote for RE-ELECTION of

CHIEF JUSTICE

Andrew M. Morrissey

"The political parties have made no nominations for Chief Justice. The Chief Justice is not elected as a party candidate, but his name will be found with other Judicial Candidates, and school officers on a separate ballot. "We favor the re-election of Chief Justice Morrissey because we believe in the law designed to take the courts out of politics and to elect Judges because of their qualifications. "Six years ago when he became Chief Justice the court was about three years behind. Today the court is as nearly up with its work as it is practicable for a supreme court to be. Credit for this is not wholly due to the Chief Justice, but other members of the court who have contributed to this result give full credit to Chief Justice Morrissey for his share in its accomplishment. "He has executive ability that gets results. He enjoys the friendship and co-operation of his associates. He has the respect and confidence of the lawyers who have business in the supreme court. He has helped to clear away many technicalities of the law. Law-breakers have been brought to justice and honest men enjoy the protection of the courts. "If you are in doubt about how to vote on Chief Justice, ask your District Judge."—Lincoln Tribune.
