The Rivals

When Abel Dayton, manufacturer, was influenced by his physician to spend a year at a health resort, he encouraged his employees to faithful service by distributing a very liberal bonus. He rather favored Pearce Mantell and Rodney Harper, distant relatives. It fairly took Mantell off his feet to have five hundred dollars in a lump. It set him dreaming. As to Harper, he felt that the nest egg of a fortune had come to him.

Pearce Mantell signalized his good fortune by equipping himself for a splurge. He had always longed to have an automobile and a sleek, smart auto salesman found no difficulty in prevailing upon Mantell to pay two hundred dollars down on a bright and shining car. Mantell anticipated his usual two weeks' vacation, indifferent to the odd hundreds in monthly installments that he would have to pay later on.

There was a road between Acton and the city where for over half a mile a slanting descent followed a tortuous course of sharp curves, with high bluffs at either side. Here one afternoon there were strung along as many as twenty cars. The cause of the stoppage could not be ascertained, as the curves shut out all view ahead.

Finally a motorist ventured to edge along the side of the road, to come upon Mantell, his machine at a standstill and he coolly wiping the dust from his auto. He had arranged to take Miriam Dale to the city to attend to some shopping, and wanted to have the auto look its very best to dazzle the senses of the prettiest girl in Acton.

Mantell chuckled serenely as he escaped the jeers and chidings of the automobilists he had kept in waiting and sped on to call for Miriam. That charming marvel of femininity he had been courting once a week for several months. Rodney Harper had done the same. Mantell felt very sanguine and superior with his new acquisition, the automobile. Then, too, he fancied himself generally a good deal of a "sport," while Harper was only a plodder. Mantell was employed in the offices of the Dayton establishment. Harper's duties were those of a buyer. His province was to purchase what supplies the factory required. Usually they were ordered per freight or express from various manufacturing centers, but when it was some light stuff, hurriedly needed, Tim Ruggles an old employee, drove to the city in an ancient canopied wagon and gathered up what was required.

Upon the day when Mantell was aiming to impress pretty Miriam with a due sense of his importance, it chanced that some articles were very much needed for the next day's work at the factory. Tim was home ill, and Harper volunteered to act as his substitute. He slipped on old Tim's overall suit and was five miles on his way, when an imperious honk! honk! was followed by an automobile whizzing by him. It threw up a cloud of dust, but not so dense that it hid from Harper's eyes a smiling face and a genially waved hand. Miriam, seated beside Mantell, pleased and happy, was never forgetful of courtesy.

Mantell left Miriam at a store, arranging to call for her at five o'clock. He then drove up to the curb awaiting her appearance. She did not come, for he had mistaken another mercantile establishment for the point of meeting. When he ascertained his blunder he hastened to the right store to find it closed for the day. He was an easily rattled youth, drove about wildly, turned a corner in too much of a hurry, ran into another machine, wrecking it, and was haled up to the police station for reckless driving.

Poor Miriam was distressed when she had waited an hour beyond the appointed time and no Mantell appeared. Dusk was coming on and rain threatened. Finally she took the trolley line, which ran within five miles of Acton, burdened with bundles and timorously starting down the dark and lonely road homeward bound, a daunted maid as to courage, and angry at her chevallier's unaccountable desertion. Her feet were encased with mud, her clothing and bundles sopping wet. A vehicle came up behind her.

"Why, Miriam!" spoke the heartsome, welcoming voice of Rodney Harper, "Alone! Here? Whatever has happened to Mantell?" and Miriam nestled close to Rodney under the canopy of the front seat, a thankful, relieved mortal, and forgot all her troubles.

"I've got to stop a minute at the old Beardsley cottage," spoke Rodney, as they entered the town. "It's vacant, you know, and I have bought it and am going to fix it up. By leaving some paint and hardware there now it will save another journey tomorrow."

"You won't live there all alone, will you, Rodney?" propounded artless Miriam.

She unconsciously invited an explanation, urged on by a realization on the part of Rodney of her bewitching prettiness.

"Oh, no, Miriam," he responded—"not until I find a wife to keep it in order for me, and, Miriam, will you come and be that to me if I ask you?"

And gloom, darkness, rain, the spontaneous proposal came, but as Miriam clung to his arm and hung her head, Rodney Harper fancied all the world was aglow with rainbows and sunshine!

TO THE CITIZENS OF NORTH PLATTE:

October 28, 1920.

We, the undersigned ministers of North Platte, believe in the future of our city, and in its citizenship. We are interested in everything that tends toward your betterment, and opposed to everything that tends to your hurt, especially spiritually. With these thoughts in mind, we offer the following protests:

We, as Christian Ministers, knowing God's laws and commandments, have watched with considerable alarm the increasing desecration of the Lord's Day (Sunday) and the consequent demoralization attendant thereon.

We regret that the base-ball teams representing our city have found it necessary to schedule most of their games on Sunday afternoons, and have watched with even keener regret the attendance thereon of many whose example should have been otherwise.

We have also watched with concern and alarm the increased tendency among prominent citizens to make of Sunday a day for golf tournaments. We wonder if the participants realize that they have kept boys (caddies) from Sunday School for months at a time, and that at a period in those boys' lives when if they are weaned away from the church, it will be next to impossible to regain them. They look up to you men and women: they see you turn your back upon God and God's House, and they follow in your steps. We cannot help but wonder if you have considered this serious phase of your actions.

Therefore, we, the ministers of North Platte, protest most earnestly against these and all other forms of unchristian recreations, and call upon you citizens, especially you whose names are on the church rolls, to stop these wrong ways, and to take your accustomed places in the church of the living God.

Faithfully yours,

H. E. HESS,

P. H. STEVENS,

J. H. CURRY,

P. A. SHENK,

C. F. KOCH.

False Economy.

If you need a Dodge Brothers car now, it is false economy to delay your purchase, and probably lose business, or time, or both.

Dodge Brothers car prices are fixed for six months at least, and there is no intention of changing now, either in price or quality, except the constant effort to better the quality of these good cars.

A famous Chicago merchant has truthfully said that "Quality Remains Long After the Price is Forgotten" but he who now waits or buys what he does not want, will often remember the hot water he had to chase, or the rear wheel he jacked up each morning before he could start.

Dodge Brothers cars pay dividends in faithful, economical service—they are both a winter and summer car. You have all noticed the positive quiet starting of Dodge cars even in the coldest weather.

What I mean to say is that you cannot save money by waiting or buying something cheaper if you have real need for a good car—if you have no need, then of course don't buy anything—wait until you have need and then buy something good and dependable.
