

Edison's Peace Work

The Semi-Weekly issue of The Tribune under date of Nov 11th, contained an article with some account of the part Edison took in the recent great world war. It gave us an idea of a few things which that man of great genius accomplished toward helping to end the struggle of nations.

Edison has spent a life time in concentrated thought and effort along scientific lines and the world now is reaping the benefit of his labor.

Perhaps among the many things he has given us, there is none more marvellous or inexplicable than the new Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph, which has now reached the height of perfection both in the power of its reproduction and in the style of its models.

Having obtained his desired result as to the accuracy of tone and identical likeness to the human voice, he determined that his work should be a superior product, not only inside, but out side as well. Accordingly, he sent men, who were artists in their line—to the English Manor Houses, French Chateaus and Italian Castles to find out just what style of cabinet might best encase his choicest treasure. From there, they came with plans for seventeen different models, which are now on the market for those who wish the best in music and refinement in their homes.

So from things of war and destruction, Edison has turned away and is now giving us that thing which makes life really happy and worth while—that thing which makes living a pleasure, bringing with it educational uplift and an inspiration that we can get in no other way. He has made it possible for every family to have music in its home—not that class of music that ruffles our nerves, but the kind that thrills us thru and thru, and gives us the same inspiration that we have in the very presence of the artist himself.

However much we may feel that he did to help bring the war to a close he is doing even more to establish peace thru the medium of music; a peace that takes from the hearts of the American people, that spirit of unrest and disquietude that was a by-product of the war.

If you do not have that source of peace in your own home it is because you do not know the New Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph, and have not made it a member of your family. If such is the case, drop in and let
