TOO TRUE

A greater part of the Union Pacific passenger business seems to have switched to the freight trains. Passenger coaches are almost empty on all trains; thirty "bo's" were counted riding on one freight train last Sunday.—Brady Vindicator.

SAFE LANDING

Pilot F. C. Moore of the air mail service landed on the Searle flying field this morning with a clogged gasoline line. Button and Searle made the necessary repairs, put in forty gallons of gasoline and the pilot left for North Platte. He was enroute from Cheyenne to Omaha. This is the second mail ship that has landed on this field for repairs, since the official marking and designating of this field for an emergency landing field for mail pilots.—Keith Co. News.

SPRING

The Brown Thrasher has arrived. It is not his custom to come north as early as the robin and since he is neither so friendly, nor so numerous as Friend Redbreast, he does not get as much advertising. Nevertheless it is something of an event when a thrasher returns to his old haunts and begins to pour out his joyful soul in song and all music lovers in his vicinity can but rejoice. The thrasher is at his best perhaps in the early morning when he perches on the highest bough he can find and rocks to and fro in the sunshine while he sings. But a little later, in the nesting season, when he comes nearer to earth and hides in some thickly leaved tree and sings to his mate in the depth of a summer night—ah well, the nightingale may well look after his laurels!—York Teller.

APRIL TEMPERATURES WERE EXACTLY NORMAL BUT RAINFALL LIGHT

The monthly summary of weather conditions for April has just been issued by Weatherman Shilling. It shows that the average temperature for the month was 49 which is just the same as the average for April during the past 47 years. The highest was 85 and the lowest 18. During the month we had 1.3 inches of rainfall. The average is 2.15 so we are short .85 this April. The number of clear days was 13. There were 8 partly cloudy and 9 cloudy days during the month.

JERRY

By GRACE R. OLIN.

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

If Jerry's feelings had been hurt an hour previous, he certainly didn't act it now. He reaped and trotted by turns, the most joyous Airdead pup, apparently, in all the world.

Back of him streamed a rope, a good long and substantial rope, fastened securely to his gay red collar. Mr. Holcomb had tied it himself, and then had dragged, literally dragged, the reluctant Jerry to his dog-house by the stable and bound him there.

Jerry had worked very hard with his sharp white teeth before he was free, but free at last he was.

"A good-for-nothing fool pup," Mr. Holcomb had called him. Just why, Jerry couldn't reason. He had grabbed a neat little hole in Mr. Holcomb's brown slipper, and sampled a gray sock, surely nothing to fly into a rage about, as his master had done.

"Don't scold him, Abner," Jerry heard his mistress plead. "He's only a puppy, and remember, he's Billy's dog."

Billy had gone away one morning, and he had never come back. He had heard them say Billy was sleeping in Flanders, and Jerry didn't know the way to Flanders or he would have gone and awakened him.

Just before him stretched a great hill; the sun shone warm and red before him. Suddenly Jerry sat down. What was over that hill? That was what he wanted to know. Perhaps, Flanders, where Billy lay asleep—perhaps.

Mrs. Tuttle, her hands on her ample hips, stood in the doorway.

"Father," she called, "you and the men better be washing up; 'taint a half hour away to dinner Where's Walter?"

The old man addressed shaded his eyes with his hand.

"There he is," he answered. "Walter!" he shouted. "Dinner."

The young man turned and came toward the house, the dry leaves crackling beneath his feet.

"I had no idea it was that late," he said; "time goes so rapidly when one thinks."

He ran his hand confusedly through his hair—crisp, dark hair, tinged prematurely with gray.

Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle exchanged glances.

"Don't try to think today, dear," she said soothingly. "Just rest your head, my boy, and everything will come right in time—everything, dear."

Nearly six weeks the boy had been with them. He had wandered into the yard one morning in the early fall asking for work. Who he was or where he came from he could not remember. He was physically well, but his memory was a blank. He had served in the war, that much he remembered. "Walter," Mrs. Tuttle had called him, after her own son, who had died in infancy. The old family doctor had done all his skill could do.

Very delicious, indeed, was the brown turkey that adorned the Tuttle table; very tempting the golden squash pie, the cranberry and mound of snowy potatoes. And in the midst of the merry group gathered around the board a young man sat, grave and woe.

Vaguely he remembered another table where he had sat glad and laughing, too. Dimly a mother's face arose mistily before him; indistinctly a father's voice spoke, and shadowy-like another form, a hairy, excited little form took shape before him.

"Mrs. Tuttle," Norah's voice arose wrathfully from the kitchen door, "there's a dirty yelling dog scratching all the paint off the back door to get in. Send one of the men to shoo him off."

"Perhaps he's hungry, Norah," Mr. Tuttle went towards the door as he spoke. "And being it's a holiday we'll share the feast with him. Here boy," he called.

But with a quick rush the dog had brushed him aside. Straight to the side of the weary young man he came, his short stubby tail wagging joyfully.

"Don't you know me?" his barks, persistent and happy, seemed to say.

Something seemed to break in the man's brain, and once more he saw a little bedroom hung with pink chintz curtains. Clearly he heard a loved voice call:

"Billy, time to get up, pancakes this morning."

As if it were yesterday, he felt the cold nose of a little friendly dog.

"Get up Billy," he seemed to say also.

And quite suddenly the grave young man reached down and gathered a pup, mud, bedraggled rope and all close, close to his heart.

"Jerry," he whispered softly, and the tears streamed down his cheeks, "Jerry, thank God, you came to wake me up."

And over the hill a tense old man patted a mother's shoulder with a hand that shook.

"Nettie," he cried, "that blessed pup can have my go-to-meeting shoes and my grey socks for dessert if he wants them. Nettie," his words broke on his lips, "the boy phoned they'd be here as soon as our auto would let them." His wife took her hand at last from the receiver whence the wonderful message had come.

"Abner," she said and her face was glorified, "put a plate down for Jerry," And Abner did.
