Pushing Time Back at the Age of Fifty

Along about the time a man turns the corner of age fifty he is apt to get something wrong. It may be he finds he can't get an insurance policy, or that he is becoming tired too easily, or can't think consecutively. Some call it high blood pressure, some call it hardening of the arteries.

some refer to it as kidney disease. It is caused by pressure upon spinal nerves, and is corrected by chiropractic spinal adjustments removing this causative pressure. High blood pressure comes to men or women under forty, but not so often. When the kidneys properly filter the blood, the deposit on the artery walls which stiffens them and becomes high blood pressure, is carried off, and eliminated through the kidneys.

BEHIND FOOTLIGHTS

By KATHLEEN M. MOORE.

"How would you like to call me baby? How would you like to cuddle me? How would you like to call me baby? And hold me on your knee? I'd like someone to call me baby, For I'm as lonesome as can be."

Little did the vast audience that crowded the theater night after night to see and hear the winsome little star sing and dance so merrily before the footlights realize that the pretty smile and airy manner only served to cover up the sad heart of the girl.

The musical comedy was booked for a six weeks' engagement, and at every performance Betty St. Clair won the hearts of more and more admirers. Many young men—yes, and old ones, too, took her little songs seriously, and sent her letters asking her to be their "baby."

Sometimes Betty consented to go to dine with them, but never more than once with the same one, for that was as far as her interest went.

Betty's real name was Loraine Wellington. She had been so happy in her little cottage with her husband of six months! She was so proud of him, and so jealous! It was this green-eyed monster that had caused the first quarrel. Betty had believed gossip rather than listen to reason and her husband. Thinking she was only an obstacle in the way of his happiness, she decided to steal away one night.

Betty knew that the stage would be the last place her folks would look for her.

The curtain would rise, shortly, for the final performance of the long engagement.

At the given time Betty skipped out on the stage.

The song seemed eternally long, but when at last it was over, she danced off the stage, only to stagger blindly to her room. She was unable to respond to an encore, despite the fact the audience called again and again.

In her room Betty vowed she would not go before that house again. It was between the first and second acts and the little star lay on her couch—her maid bathing her fevered head. There came a rap, and a note was slipped under her door.

When the maid handed it to her mistress she only pushed it aside impatiently.

"Throw it in my waste basket, Marie," she said. But as she thought better of it, she decided to give the note her attention, and she asked for it. When she had read it through she smiled and said:

"It just reads, 'May I see you? I am in the lower right hand box. Nod if yes. An Admirer.' This is so different from the letters I am accustomed to receiving. Marie, I am going to answer this one. Give this card to 'Billy,' and direct it to my admirer."

It seemed no time till there came a rap on the door and Marie admitted a tall young man in evening dress.

"I am the admirer," he bowed to Betty. She put out her hand to welcome him, but as her eyes met his a cry of glad surprise escaped her lips. "Dick!" she gasped.

He drew back and stared at her as one in a trance.

"Loraine! My wife!" and before she realized it she was being crushed in two eager arms. Betty nestled contentedly in her husband's arms as one who had found a long-sought haven. She was too glad to speak.

"I've sought far and wide for you and at last gave up the search as all in vain, and—" he broke the silence, but she interrupted with:

"Never mind, Dick, you can tell me all later. I'm too happy now for words," and she looked up into his face with such a bewitching smile that none could deny the fact.

"Madame! Madame! It is your cue now," Marie cried excitedly.

Apparently Betty had forgotten her illness, for she sent Dick back to his seat in the audience with a hasty kiss, then arranged herself for her final appearance. Her acting was even better than at other performances, and when she sang the song that had made her so popular the onlookers were captivated by her winsomeness.

They wondered why she catered to the right-hand box more than any other place. The thoughts of him there spurred her on to do her best, and she was forced to appear time and time again to the applause. When the curtain at last rang on the final act it was a different little girl who prepared for home.

"Suppose, Dickie, my boy, I wasn't your wife, but just some little girl who had always been on the stage, would you have liked to call me 'baby' just the same?" Betty murmured as she nestled close in the big machine that was speeding them home.

"Now, you just forget that I flirted with you. You are my wife, and you know I would never have fallen in love with that little actress if she hadn't reminded me of my wife. When I discovered I had fallen in love with my own wife I also discovered that I did not know her as well as I thought I did. We're going to start our honeymoon all over and idle gossipers will never separate us again, eh? Satisfied?" he bent close, squeezing her fondly.

"Yum!" she piped, and she heaved a contented little sigh that to Dick spoke volumes.

Lincoln County old settlers who remember the surveying gangs of early days will be interested in this account of present day land office methods as told by Frank M. Johnson, supervisor of surveys of the United States General Land Office.

Mr. Johnson relates an interesting story of the transportation problems encountered by the land office. He is head of the field work for the Land Office which is a division of the Department of Interior, and his territory covers the entire United States. There are 13 branch offices, most of them in the west, as the chief duty of the office is the surveying of public lands. Today most of this work takes the surveyors into the roughest and most sparsely settled sections, principally deserts and mountains. Originally they used wagons and four-mule teams but as these became incapacitated they are supplanted by motor equipment. And as the present motory service, it is being supplanted by Dodge Brothers cars. As the work progresses, the territories visited by the surveyors becomes rougher and it is necessary to abandon the heavy equipment in favor of light but powerful and thoroughly reliable cars.

"It is impossible to estimate the enormous saving that has been effected by changing our equipment and putting the chief burden of transportation on the screen side business car," said Mr. Johnson, "but I can cite one illustration which is typical. A double outfit, which consists of 14 or 16 men, completed their work about 15 miles, out of Glenrock, Wyo., at 3:30 one afternoon; they went to Glenrock, transacted some business before 6 o'clock, piled into their two Dodge Brothers business cars and spent the night in Wheatland, Wyo., 99 miles from Glenrock. The next day they came from Wheatland into Denver for a new assignment. The distance from Wheatland to Denver is 194 miles. The fourteen men were surveyors, assistants and supply men. The technical men, of course, draw good salaries. In the old days it would have taken four mule teams at least four days to make the same trip. Considering the fact that salaries and meals do not stop for such delays, not to speak of the loss of production, it is apparent that the government made a wise decision."
