FARM BUREAU NEWS SERVICE
SUPPLIES ITEMS FOR THE TRIBUNE READERS

It was impossible this year to arrange for an exclusive Farm Bureau camping on the state fair grounds. However, arrangements have been made by the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation to accommodate campers at Epworth Lake park where a tent can be secured for $7.00 for the entire period of the fair.

J. N. Norton, in charge of the organization work of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation will go to Platte county on August 15 to take up the matter of inaugurating a membership campaign in that county about the middle of September. When the membership campaign closed last spring it was the intention to suspend membership solidifications until early in October. Platte county, however, was anxious during the spring to conduct a campaign and had arrangements made at that time. Now the harvest is over they are anxious to get their organization started.

James R. Howard, President of the American Farm Bureau Federation, will deliver an address at the Nebraska state fair on Thursday, September 8. He will speak in the auditorium on the state fair grounds. Arrangements are also being made to secure a speaker from among the congressmen and senators who are affiliated with the "agricultural bloc". President Howard was obliged to cancel several important dates in order to come to Nebraska on September 8, but consented to come when advised that it would give thousands of Nebraska farmers their only possible opportunity of hearing him. President Howard in the last two years has become the foremost leader in agricultural circles and has always got a message that farmers should hear.

E. B. Heaton of the American Farm Bureau and J. N. Norton of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation have been engaged for speeches at a number of picnics during the coming two weeks. Mr. Heaton will speak at the following picnics: Webster County August 16, Dawson County on the 17th; Hall county on the 19th; Washington County on the 22nd; Furnas County on the 23rd; Clay County on the 24th; Richardson County on the 25th and Douglas on the 26th. Norton will speak at similar gatherings in Otoe County on the 10th; Hamilton county (Marquette) on the 11th and Colfax county on the 18th. All of the picnics are under the auspices of the Farm Bureau, except Saunders county which is an old settlers picnic and Clay county which is a farmers' union picnic.

Poultry raisers are so keenly interested in better stock that the days of the scrub flock seem numbered. Out of 75 Webster county farmers who in one day enrolled in the "Better Stock—Better Stock" campaign, 65 reported standard bred fowls. The principal breeds reported are, in the order named, Plymouth Rocks, Leghorns, Rhode Island Reds, Orpingtons, and Wyandottes. Barred Plymouth Rocks were more numerous than any other varieties of the breed. White Leghorns predominated in that breed and White Wyandottes were more popular than the Silver Laced. In filling out in the better stock campaign many farmers emphasize the quality of their poultry. Not only do they report that they are using purebred males, but in most instances the females are also standard bred.

Boys may now enter the University School of Agriculture at Lincoln at the age of sixteen years. This reduction in the entrance age limit was made on account of the large number of applications from 16 year old boys to enter school this fall. It has been apparent to the faculty of this state school for some time that many boys especially the more ambitious kind, desire to complete their agricultural education as early as possible. Those who enter school at 16 will be through at 20, and thus will be prepared to give the best years of their early life to getting a good start at farming and stock raising. The University School of Agriculture teaches practical farming and stock raising, and every boy who is at all interested in this great field should investigate what it has to offer. The reduction in the entrance age limit will accommodate a considerable number of boys. The school's enrollment is usually about 300. Farmers in forty-five counties of Nebraska are listed in the Nebraska certified seed list just issued by the College of Agriculture. Kanred wheat, Nebraska's Improved Turkey Red wheats known as Nebraska No. 6 and Nebraska No. 60, White Kheron oats known as Nebraska No. 21, Minnesota No. 184 Barley and Rosen rye are listed. All of these grains have superior qualities. Kanred wheat is outyielding ordinary Turkey Red wheat from three to four bushels, as are Nebraska No. 6 and No. 60 wheats. Nebraska No. 21 oats is outyielding ordinary Kheron oats seven to eight bushels on the average. Rosen rye is superior to ordinary rye and is becoming popular in the rye growing sections of the state. Farmers in the South Platte section of the state who grew Minnesota No. 184 barley are well pleased with it. Certified seed is seed examined in the field by representatives of the College of Agriculture. The history of the seed is traced to be sure that the seed is true to name. Mixtures of other grains, diseases, noxious weeds, etc., are noted. If more than a mere trace of them are found the field is rejected and not certified. If accepted the trace of impurities, if any is listed. A list of farmers growing certified seed may be obtained by writing the College of Agriculture at Lincoln for Circular No. 108.

H. D. Lute, secretary of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation will go to Washington on August 10 to assist in preparing the case of the middle western grain and hay shippers who are seeking a reduction in freight rates at a hearing to be held before the interstate commerce commission on August 15. The hearing was granted by the interstate commerce commission upon the request of the middle western railway commissions who expect to show that the present freight rates are entirely out of proportion with the prices being paid for agricultural products. The several railway commissions have called upon the American Farm Bureau Federation to present the economic side of the question from the farmers' standpoint for which data is being prepared by the Farm Bureau Federation's Chicago statistician, Thorne Browne, member of the Nebraska railway commission called upon Mr. Lute, F. M. Devesse of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation legal department and J. W. Shorttill of the Nebraska Co-operative Grain and Livestock Association to gather data regarding freight rates in Nebraska. Mr. Lute and Mr. Shorttill will testify at the Washington hearing.

Rural women's clubs looking for something of real value can well afford to turn their attention to preparing for the coming school year, according to a new circular of the State College of Agriculture. There are many little things which can be done for the average country school at small expense and which will be of much value and comfort for the children. Many country schools are deplorably lacking in drinking water facilities, and physicians are unanimous in the opinion that people do not drink enough water. Do you remember the old water pail which you were compelled to patronize when the teacher would delegate two youngsters to tramp half a mile down the country road and lug back a three-gallon pail of warm water, which thirsty boys and girls soon drain to the last drop, and then endure the rest of the day with almost parched throats. Many schools still have ramshackle toilet facilities which are a disgrace to any community. A little time and a little money would relieve this situation. There are things about many schools which would soon be remedied if the women of the community would band together and arouse a little latent pride. Parents interested in their children having better schools should obtain a copy of this circular. Ask for women's club outline No. 2.

WITHOUT LOVE

By ELSIE G. PARKER.

(Copyright 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
The weather was bracing as Marge walked home from the Daysville post-office, yet her footsteps lagged. In her hand were two bulky letters. To the kindly neighbors, who took much interest in Marge and her career, these letters—always fat ones—were a joy.

Marge was an authoress, you must understand. Oh, yes, she wrote many, many stories; but only she knew that they were all unpublished. The village folk thought the reason she refused to talk about her stories was a modest one. They did not understand the meaning of the thick envelopes which contained rejected manuscripts.

Three years ago Marge had a love affair. All Daysville had known it, and had thrilled at it. Then one day, in the city paper's society page, there had been an announcement: "Miss Ray Day Burton betrothed to Mr. Robert Benedict."

"His" name! Marge's sweetheart! Everyone was indignant; and Marge wrote him a brief note telling him never to try to see her again.

Those three long years had gone by slowly. And Marge, now an ardent man-hater of twenty-two, was an authoress. Yet her works could hardly be called stories; they were satires. All the scorn she felt for "man" she embodied in her manuscripts.

"Love!" she would say. "Love! Everyone writes of it, sings of it, dreams of it. Not I! Here is one who would not write of love, but will laugh at it. It's nothing but a farce, anyway!" And she really thought she believed it.

Consequently, back came all her stories, accompanied by a polite little rejection slip.
In the city, Bob Benedict had risen from a newspaper reporter to assistant manager and editor of a short story magazine. And, while reading some of the numerous manuscripts one day, he came upon one written by a Marge Witcox of Daysville. It was no other than the girl who had "thrown him over" without an explanation! With increased interest he reread the story that ridiculed love and men.

"Love, but she's bitter! Maybe some one jilted her, as she did me. She deserves it—but no, no, no, no, no! She must have had a good reason," he mused.

At length he persuaded the editor to let him experiment, and send the following letter:

"Dear Maudie: We read your unusual story, 'Green Apples,' with much interest. Although at present we cannot use the story, we would like to have, some time in the near future, an opportunity to talk with you about some work you might do for us.
"Very truly yours,
"THE EDITOR."

When Marge received this letter she was overjoyed. In fact, she almost changed her opinion of men. She wanted to go to the editor the next day. But, of course, that would look too eager, so she waited two whole days.

All a-trueble, she reached the building where the magazine was published. She told the office boy that the editor had asked her to call. He was not at all impressed, but, indifferently, took her name toward the editorial offices.

"The editor is out, miss, but the assistant will see you," he said, when he returned.

"But!" she gasped, when she opened the door and saw who was in the room. "You!"

"Wag, Marge!" exclaimed the assistant editor, trying to look very much surprised, and to control his shaking knees.

"You wanted to see me—I mean, the editor wrote me—the letter will explain," she passed him the letter.

"Ah, yes, Miss Witcox," he said, very "editorially." "Wouldn't you sit down? We feel you have talent, and are wasting yourself on this satire stuff. What the public wants is the love interest or human interest. Now, a good wholesome love story stands more—"

"If you wished to see me to tell me to write love stories, I might just as well be going. For I don't intend to write any," she said, defiantly.

"You don't need to write love stories, but you do need to have stories with human interest."

"Are you trying to tell me my stories are inhuman?" the girl demanded.

"No, but I think you were inhuman when you wrote me that letter three years ago with many an explanation."

"Why, why?" stammered Marge, completely overwhelmed by the unexpectedness of the remark. "The announcement in the paper," she said lamely.

"What announcement?" snapped the assistant editor.

"Your engagement."

"I never was engaged to anyone but you, and never will be. Didn't it ever occur to you that someone else might bear the same name that I do? And remember this, young woman, you're not going away from this city till a certain judge friend of mine grants me a special license and a certain minister says certain words—binding ones, too."

"Don't you know, dear, that we can't live successfully without love, just as we can't write successfully without it?"

And at last Marge did understand.
