BROEDER DISTRICT DOINGS

The Sunday school still meets Sunday at 11 a. m. at the school house.

School opened last Tuesday with renewed vigor and energy after the holiday rest.

There was a watch party and social hoop at Carl Broeders house on New Year's eve. Everybody had a good time without violating the prohibition laws as was done in so many other places on that night.

There was a young cyclone passed over our section of the country Friday, December 30. It struck a large cattle barn on the Carl Broeder ranch completely demolishing it. There was no other great damage done by the wind.

Mrs. D. C. Whaley of Long Beach, Calif., formerly of this vicinity visited with Marshal Orton's family Wednesday and Thursday of this week. She will leave for Lexington Saturday morning where she will visit with friends and relatives for a few weeks.

PLEASANT VIEW SCHOOL ITEMS

Warm weather has prevented much ice skating but many other exciting games are thought of.

School has started again after the vacation of one week with everyone on hand. The pupils have made many New Year's resolutions.

The larger boys of Pleasant View had a snowball fight Thursday noon. Neither side won because the bell rang before it was over.

The boys of Pleasant View are chopping wood to burn while the girls made window curtains for the school room.

A Christmas program and pie social was given December 23 by the Pleasant View school and the proceeds were used to buy certain school supplies which we badly needed.

We had a light snow Tuesday. Even though it was not heavy enough for sliding it was accompanied by weather cold enough to nip our fingers and toes.

Here is a poem by Elmer Thomas, one of the pupils:

To the grammar room we go
We take a lot of pride
When tasks are fairly done
With classmates at our side
Our tasks are never long
Our studies seem like play
Then after school a jolly song
'Tis thus we work and play.

ROSE COMBED RED COCKERELS

STORIES OF THE EARLY HISTORY OF LINCOLN COUNTY

The figures given us regarding the traffic on the Lincoln highway during the past year have been surprising to most of us. One observer tells us of fifty autos passing a given point last summer in five hours. Another counted 900 cars which passed one station of the Lincoln highway in one day. Such figures are tribute to the genius of man in constructing hard roads along this Platte valley. But out of the past comes a story so wonderful that the traffic of today is almost beyond notice. Here is the story as told by W. H. McDonald the other day: "I remember my mother telling of a count she made one day in the late '60s. She and father hitched up a horse to a buggy and drove some twelve miles east of our store which was at Cottonwood. It was an early summer day and mother amused herself by counting the wagons drawn by oxen—all going west. She often repeated that she counted over nineteen hundred wagons that short distance." There were no roads, there were no bridges. The dust was terrible at times and the mud as bad at others. The wagons followed the trail but often came on six to ten abreast, fording streams and dragging their load through the deep sand. No camp awaited them at night. They were not furnished fuel and water with a shower bath thrown in. They chose their own camp, put out guards at night, warded off the marauding Indians and rustled water and fuel from the surrounding country as they went along. The figures given by Mr. McDonald are not unreasonable as there are several printed accounts of from four to five thousand wagons passing stations in one day. Such was the Overland trail and we have nothing today which can equal it in romance and wonder.
