LOCAL AND PERSONAL

J. H. Thompson of Long Beach, is in the city visiting his daughter, Mrs. Pete Becker.

An advertisement run in this paper by the North Platte Auto Dealers contained some ideas that are worth considering. These men have a big investment here and it is going to depreciate if they do not get the local business. They carry some good cars. We would like to own one of them if we thought we could afford to. We would know that we could get service in case anything went wrong with it. We all know of someone who wanted to make a splurge and who went to Omaha or Chicago or Denver or some other place and bought a car that is not handled in North Platte. He has had his lesson. Another of our friends bought a car from a so-called "peddler" got a good car perhaps but he is shy the service. The Auto Dealers are here all the time and they are giving service with the car. It is a good point that might be overlooked.

SHELLS USED AS CURRENCY

Probably the Earliest Form of Money of Which There is Any Real Knowledge.

The earliest tribes did not need money because no individual in the tribe owned anything personally. All property belonged to the tribe as a whole and none to any one person. Later on when the tribes met there arose the custom of barter or trade, the simplest form of which was the exchange of articles possessed by one tribe for those owned by another. For instance, some of the Australian tribes had a rough green stone which was valuable for making hatchets. Members of another tribe, seeing these green stone hatchets naturally wanted them. They had no money, as we know it today, but they had red ochre with which they painted their bodies. Thus it developed that the tribe owning the green stones wanted some red ochre, and each article became a kind of money—each became valuable for trading purposes.

It was necessary, however, to await the developments of a "unit of value" before money became elastic. It required something valuable in the eyes of these tribes. One of the earliest forms of this elastic money was shells. The skins of animals were long used by savage tribes as money, but these could not be carried about like shells. The skins, however, were valuable in trading and fortunes were reckoned by the number of skins owned. As soon as animals became domesticated the live animal itself replaced the skin as money.

SCHEME PROVED A NUISANCE

Office Force Refused to Allow Methodical Man to Overlook Letter Written to Himself.

The methodical Mr. Kellam granted acknowledgement when Kessler, an office assistant, presented him with a note, according to the New York Sun. "Found this in the 'K' mail box. It's addressed to you," said Kessler.

Kellam took the note, walked toward the pigeonhole mail box and later resumed his seat. It wasn't long before Kloss, another fellow worker, came up to him with a note addressed to him which he had picked out of the mail box. Kellam was not quite so cordial, but he took it and repeated his trip to the office mail box. He was even less cordial when Kianster, another associate, approached him a few minutes later and held out a note.

"I found this in the 'K,'" he began. "Darn it," shrieked Kellam. "I know where you found it. I put it there so I'd get it in the morning—it's to remind me to do something tomorrow. For the luvva Mike put it back!"

Mysteries of Nature.

One of the most mysterious powers that close observation has revealed is the capacity of certain fishes and water animals to live out of the water. Some small crustaceans have been known to lie for 40 years in dried mud without losing the power of actively living when the mud was moistened again. A naturalist visiting Jerusalem took a little mud from the pool of Gihon, at the Jaffa gate, and put it in a pill box. It lay dry for 40 years, but when some of the dry dust was put into a saucer full of water it gave rise after a short time to some lively water fleas. The eel, as is well known, can travel through damp grass. There is a tropical fish, known as the climbing perch, which has the very curious habit of scrambling by means of its pectoral fins, up stones, roots, and even the trunks of trees, in search of insects on which it feeds. Still more surprising is the habit of a South African fish, called Clarias, which is said to make nocturnal raids on the fields in order to eat the grains of millet.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Beautiful Spring Hosiery

Spring Hosiery as beautiful as our Spring shoes

Hosiery makers surely knew that most everybody would wear low shoes this Spring, for never, we believe, have they brought out so many exquisite designs as are revealed in our Spring displays. And of course, they did not forget those who prefer the smartness of plain sheer silk styles.
