MOISTURE

Farmers were tickled to death Saturday when perhaps more than an choice females, don't fail to attend Inch or more moisture fell. A very this sale. peculiar weather condition-rain with thunder, sleet, hall and finally snow with a heavy wind. For ten minutes hail, large as marbles fell but did not do so much damage. From ten o'clock on until evening it was amost S. C. Rhode Island Red impossible to see across the street due to the blizzard. The snow was the wettest of the season and was very welcome. However, some fields were quite badly used owing to the terrific wind, but as a whole great good came from the storm. Wheat took an almost instant growth and new color.-Wallace Winner.

OLD AND YOUNG .

While the entertainment committee were in seasion last Sunday afternoon devising ways and means and sort'o rehearsing for the entertainment of the new minister, they got a scare thrown into them, which for a moment threatened a stampede.

Some of the young men who were in attendance saw a mouse stealing down along the rail of the choir loft and immediately gave the alarm. Did the old maids move We'll say they did, and the young ones too, and the poor little mouse fairly flew, diving into the first opening that came to hand, a cold air radiator and from there to the lower regions. -Arnold Sentinel

HEREFORDS

H. Gaudreault & Son are shipping three carloads of fine cattle from Brady to Salt Lake this week to be entered in the Salt Lake cattle show.

The Gaudreaults have been breeding very best ranches in the famous Platte valley, and their Herefords enjoy a national reputation. The cattle they are shipping out are all mostly their own bloodline, and represent some of the famous blood of the breed, coming through Beau, Randolph, Dainty Domino and Beau Mischief. The Gaudreaults has been breeding registered Herefords for a good many years, and have always kept their herd up to the highest standard, having furnished herd sires for some of the greatest herds in the United States.-Brady Vindicator.

6. 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. "This is the very longest day!"

Clare all but moaned. "With the very shortest night to make up for it," sensible Jane retorted, Clare pouted; "I know that, Miss Smarty-but you know I am not talking about real time; I'm just so tired waiting for tomorrow, and the train, and the Springs afterward. How can you sit there stock still? You've never been anywhere, either,"

"Sure enough I haven't-but fidgeting won't get me there a minute earlier-and it may get me there cross and tired and red-eyed from lack of sleep--." Jane began.

Oh, do hush, old Commonsense!" Clare flung back, pouting. "You have no business to be always so right. I almost hate you."

"Hate me all you like-if it does you any good," Jane returned tranquilly. "Asleep It can't hurt me-and I'm going sound asleep in just about two minutes."

Clare wanted to pinch her equable cousin. Herself a bit of human quicksilver, she really resented Jane's even temper and lack of nerves. It was well she lacked nerves-otherwise Grandma Bingham's open favoritism would have made her unhappy. Clare could do no wrong in Grandma's partial eyes. Jane, indeed, often got scoldings, the backwash of irritation over Clare's small transgression-which could not be visited upon its rightful object.

Orphans, a bare week apart in age, they had come to womanhood neither friends nor enemies. Clare was far and away the better looking, Jane the more intelligent, capable and obedient

-also something richer. There was the rub-the home would be hers when grandma no longer needed it, also fine silver, china, rugs and so on, that had been her mother's when she was brought there a bride. Naturally grandma pinched herself, and would have pinched the household for Clare's benefit had not Jane's guardian put his foot down on such scanting. A curmudgeonly old bachelor lawyer, grandma rated him, because forsooth he did not melt at the blandishments of her pet. Yet he had not been illiberal-masters he had engaged for Jane gave free service to Clare. When grandma brought the girls to town, for Christmas and Easter shopping. Mr. Joyce behaved handsomely to everybody, buying theater tickets, paying for dinners and other incidentals quite as though he really liked it.

More, this journey was at his instance, and more than half at Jane's cost. As well pay for grandma as any other chaperon, said Joyce, adding that Clara need not spend extravagantly-she would not require an extra room, and there would be space enough for her in his big limousine. Clare was enchanted, especially after grandma bought her two new evening gowns handsomer than anything Jane

"I ought to come home engaged to a millionaire," she said over her shoulder, looking at herself in the big blurred pierglass, "If I do-be sure you will never see me here after the wedding. I hate this frowsy, mussy place, stuck full of samplers, and portraits like signboards. Granny is the only thing I'd take away with me if I could."

Jane laughed provokingly. Springwater somehow does not understand quicksilver. Some ways she was genbe over merciful. Free of envy or jealousy, she could not in the least understand Clare, who ran on resentfully: "You don't care for things as I do because you know you can have them If you choose-as I can't."

"Never mind, Clarissy," Jane said smiling. "You don't have to give houseroom to any of the horrors here. I'll give you a brand-new weddnig present. What shall it be-a diamond ring or pearl earring?"

"If only you'd give them both now without walting," Clare breathed fervently. "They'd help so. You know money loves money.'

"I thought marriage was a matter of men loving women and getting love back again," Jane said almost sharply. "But if you mean what you say you shall have your gew-gaws."

The morrow came at last. A little later the limousine went. In result Beechwood Springs had a mild sensation, made manifest in the flesh of the Leslie cousins. One was, it was whispered, quite, quite rich; one mighty easy to look at, said youth masculine. Also to dance and flirt with, but never beyond decorum-there was always a black satin dragon with high lights on gold spectacles and point lace looming in the background. Somehow insidiously rumor crept about that the beauty was likewise the heiress. Then Jane, who had been a hopeful prospect, found herself rather out of things, except with plain elderly folks who liked her clear, precise speech, her pretty deference to age. She danced, of course, moderately, walked a bit, took motor rides, but always in the family vehicle, whose handsome solidity was equal to a commercial rating. She was kindly regardful of grandmam, though everyone saw how the land lay there. Indeed there was not a dissenting voice when old Major Anstey said fervently, watching her: "A real girl, nice as they make them, and the only one in all this crowd." major was somebody-after (Seal)

just what fashion nobody knew. Light broke when a youngster with all the Estate No. 1876, of Elizabeth Nolda, deearmarks of great riches fell upon the old gentleman, hugged him, thumped his back and cried: "Old fox! Smoked out at last! Tell me what deviltry you're brewing here in the wilds."

"None at all," said the major with twinkling eyes. "Fact is, Ned, my boy, I'm up to my eyes in a plan to-join the Salvation Army."

After which the pair locked hands and laughed loud and long. Inside a week Beechwood Springs revolved about E. Forsythe Anstey. He had brought two cars, a valetchauffeur, and drove himself like an angel-or a demon, according to the reporter. He was grossly but affectionately impertinent to the major, who, it came to be understood, was less a man of mystery than of millions. When the fact seeped out Jane ceased from playing around with him-found guests for seats in the limousine. Clare might have tried to make up for her cousin's defection if she had not been so hot on the trall of E. Forsythe. "He is exactly what I'm looking for," she confided to Jane. "And I know he thinks I'm great fun-told me so outright. If only I had some new clothes -everybody here knows all I have"pausing with half defiant appeal in her

Jane nodded softly, "One frock at least," she promised.

Clare looked down, saying shamedly: "I hate begging. Be sure, though, I'll pay you when-I can."

"There is no debt," Jane answered. But, Clare, please stop throwing yourself so openly at his head. Remember the name is mine same as yours." thing," Clare shot back through angry tears, running away. But she clutched Jane's check eagerly an hour later, and drove away smiling in a fool's paradise to select that which she felt sure would clinch her victory."

As she went out of sight Major Anstey said bowing over grandma's hand: "Madam, may I speak to you of-a private matter? Outside? I had rather not be overheard."

Fluttered, yet beaming, grandma went outside. She beamed still more when she understood that the private matter was the asking of her granddaughter's hand in marriage for his nephew, Edward Forsythe. A good boy in spite of the froth on top, said the major-a wife of the right sort would be not merely his making, but his salvation. Hadn't courage to speak for himself unless the ice was broken a bit; said he had never been the least afraid of a girl until he saw Miss

There grandma fainted opportunely. Jane came rushing to help her, so the major had a chance to explain. What she said in answer is immaterial in view of the fact that she has been for several years past Mrs. Edward Forsythe Anstey, yet is still as plain as an old shoe.
