

A SIGNIFICANT TENDANCY IN MODERN SCHOOL HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Victor F. Beck.

The modern school building with its batteries of windows, its well distributed exits, and other familiar features has been evolved from the rather picturesque turreted and high gabled structures in which the up-to-date city or village of twenty-five years ago took particular pride. The present type is however none the less beautiful than the old, but it is less ornamental. While the old type was designed from the outside in, the new type is designed from the inside out. The floor plan of the new type governs the features which characterize the exterior, whereas the elevations in the old type fixed to a large extent the interior arrangement.

In consequence our newer buildings are better adapted to their purpose. The lighting is better, the dimensions of the rooms more in keeping with usable space, the height of ceilings proportioned to actual needs, the stairways easier to climb and more advantageous, the toilet rooms eliminated from the basement, the corridors narrowed to actual requirements for movements of classes and a number of other equally desirable features given befitting recognition.

One idea that until recently has clung tenaciously to our plans has been that of basements under our schoolhouses. Though few reasons have ever been advanced for the use they might be put to except for storage, generally of inflammable material, the idea that such rooms were desirable was quite generally accepted. Until within recent years they were seldom given any interior trim or used for particularly desirable purpose but as manual training, home economics, agriculture and gymnasium exercises began to find their way into the schools they were put into as usable space as possible so as to provide quarters in which these subjects gained in popularity, the instances the rooms were low, dark, poorly ventilated and heated. As the subjects gained in popularity, the basement rose out of the ground until its floor level was not much more than three feet below grade. It advanced from the rank of a basement to the more euphonious designation of ground floor. It attained some standing by being well lighted, satisfactorily heated, and at least provided with ventilation. The first floor in the old type had been only three or four feet above grade now moved up, until it was ten feet above the surface of the ground. The primary children who in the old type had climbed six or at the most eight steps in order to reach the floor on which their rooms were located were required to climb twenty steps. The first floor reached an altitude which to the lay mind seemed a misnomer and the danger of life in a non fire proof building of this type soon awakened serious concern in the minds of those who realized what it would mean to get small five, six and seven year old children out of such a building in case of fire.

Rooms with floor levels below grade are not looked upon with favor by any one. They generally require a defense when their location is called in question for any purpose except storage. Many people think that a gymnasium may well be in the ground and if the room is well lighted, and properly ventilated, the floors and walls dry, there perhaps is no valid reason for opposing this location of the gymnasium. The fact remains however, that more than one gymnasium thus located has been poorly lighted, inefficiently ventilated, and has developed hummocked floors and damp walls. It would actually seem that in order to overcome these handicaps, it is necessary to expend more money for the construction of these rooms than for rooms above the ground. If this is actually the case, then why spend more for rooms that are not as desirable as rooms that can be had above grade at less cost?

These considerations of safety, satisfactory service, and questionable economy have led a great many school boards throughout the states to eliminate basements altogether, except to provide for the mechanical equipment. The first floor is then two and one half feet above grade. The small children are not required to climb high stairs. In this way all the subjects are placed on a parity. Industrial courses are given as good quarters as academic. When changes become necessary either may yield to the other.

When conditions of site and number of pupils do not demand a three story structure, two stories only are erected. Such two story buildings are economical of construction, facilitate rapid egress from the building, fit well into the residence section of any city and when designed by competent architects, add materially to the aesthetic effect which good architecture always produces.

The tendency is one which has awakened much favorable comment among educators and architects alike. It has so many sensible considerations in its favor, that it would seem reasonable to suppose that the type will become general as new buildings are being planned.

Dodge Brothers are now producing over 700 cars daily in their works at Detroit, but sales are so heavy all over the country that most dealers are not able to make immediate deliveries. It certainly is a "Dodge Year." Protect yourself by ordering early if you want to get full benefit out of your car this year.

MARYS AT THE EMPTY TOMB

"He is Not Here, for He is Risen, as He Said," Was the Angel's Message.

In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre. And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow: And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead, and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word.

And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

Then said Jesus unto him, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.—Matthew xxviii.

EASTER'S MESSAGE OF HOPE

Renewed Faith in the Life Hereafter Comes With the Opening Days of Spring.

The very magnitude of the claims for immortality count for the place that Easter has had in the imagination and the hopes of mankind. The breadth of the claims for immortality is what counts for the inspirations of men and their efforts to do the things that their best natures and highest talents propose for them. The wonder of the claims for immortality accounts for the power that the religion that teaches the immortal hope has over the lives of the believers. Gentling and pacifying and stimulating and genius-empowering, the claims for immortality transcend any other motive force in the activities of mankind. Nothing else has equal civilizing and humanizing power, and nothing else can cause men to be satisfied with the vicissitudes of their existence. "Come see the place where the Lord lay." Such is the word of faith in the life hereafter to those who have affected to believe that man is only mechanism. But Easter has not to do with cold reason; it has to do with colorful imagery. Music sounds from the churches and poetry from the writings of the testators to the immortal hope, and the souls of men are bathed in a beatific glory. Angels and men join in the Easterday ascription, and those of the wise men who were belated at the manger come now to spread their trophies at the tomb which has been invested by science with its late but joyous testimony to the glory of an endless life.

TO BE EASTER BRIDES

Quaint and beautiful customs and rites of Easter, dating back for many centuries, still prevail in many parts of the world.

In far-off Montenegro the ancient custom of Easter marriages still prevails. Young marriageable girls in holiday attire assemble in the public square and wait to be selected as brides.

The most precious gift of Easterday is love for our Risen Lord.
