

CHATS WITH YOUR GAS MAN

You turn a lever and gas service is instantly ready to cook the evening meal, light or heat the home. Did you ever stop to think that the source of that energy may have been in the coal mines and oil wells hundreds of miles away?

You pick up a telephone receiver and a city thousands of miles away answers your call. You board a street car and an invisible power moves it and you reach your destination.

You want to converse with London or Shanghai, and through the air without the aid of a wire, or through cables under the ocean, goes your message to points on the other side of the world.

A switch is pushed and great engines start a mill in operation, employing thousands of men.

Common occurrences, you say. Not at all. The story of the utilization of energy by our great public service companies is a story of miracles.
