VICTORIA HONORED.

Millions of People Attend the Diamond Jubilee of Great Britain's Queen.

The Grand Procession a Great Success. Composed of the Flowers of Europe's Thrones—Not a Mishap Occurred.

LONDON, June 22.—Countless thousands of loyal British subjects and distinguished representatives of every nation in the world participated in and millions on millions of people witnessed the grand celebration of the 60th anniversary of the coronation of Queen Victoria yesterday. Not a serious mishap occurred throughout the day, and the venerable ruler of the great British nation passed through the ordeal of the day without the slightest bad effect.

The queen breakfasted at nine o'clock in Buckingham palace and informed her physician that she was not fatigued by the previous day's ceremonies. At 11:10 a. m. she slowly descended the stairs, assisted by a scarlet-clad and white-turbaned Indian attendant. She was dressed in black, wore a black bonnet with white and carried a white sunshade. At the foot of the stairway her majesty paused for a minute and touched an electric button connected with all the telegraphic systems throughout the British empire, and it flashed around the world the message: "From my heart, I thank my beloved people. May God bless them."

When the first part of the sovereign's escort rode into view—the Second Life Guards—the whisper ran electrically: "She's coming." The guards were soon succeeded by the escort of British and foreign princes. Many faces were known, recognized and cheered. This brilliant escort was composed of the flower of Europe's thrones. A cheer broke forth that seemed to shake the ground, renewed again and again, as her majesty's carriage approached. This was drawn by the famous eight Hanoverian horses, cream colored, with long tails, white eyes and pink noses, their manes richly woven with ribbons of royal blue, with new state harness, saddle cloths of royal blue velvet with rich fringes of bullion, the leather work red morocco above and blue morocco beneath, glittering everywhere with royal arms. The liveries of the postillions were in keeping with the harness, and cost $600 each. For once since the prince consort's death the queen permitted the mourning band to be removed from the men's arms.

At Temple Bar, the boundary of the ancient city of London, the queen was met by the lord mayor and city officials on horseback, while the judges of the courts and queen's counsels in full court regalia, and ladies formed the background. Lord Mayor Faudel Phillips wore the earl's robe to which lord mayors are entitled when crowned heads visit the city—a cloak of ruby silk velvet lined with white silk and edged with ermine. Sheriffs Ritchie and Rogers wore the sheriff's velvet court dress, scarlet gowns and chains.

On the arrival of the queen the lord mayor uncovered. Approaching the carriage of her majesty his lordship, with all due obeisance, presented the hilt of the city's pearl sword, which was undrawn. This was the ceremony of dutiful submission. The queen quietly touched it, thus returning it to the lord mayor in token that his submission was graciously accepted by his sovereign. Her majesty then commanded the lord mayor and sheriffs to proceed and the procession moved toward St. Paul's amid cheers that seemed, in the narrow streets, to be echoed and re-echoed.

The great bells of St. Paul's broke out in a chorus as the queen's carriage started from Temple Bar, and only ceased as her majesty's carriage halted opposite the platform on which awaiting her were the archbishop of Canterbury, the lord bishop of London, the bishops of Marlborough and Stapney, and the clergy of St. Paul's. In the surrounding dignitaries were leading representatives of all the faiths of England. The ecclesiastics, who had issued from the great west door as the queen approached, standing beside the improvised altar, now began the simple service. A Te Deum by Dr. Martin, organist of St. Paul's, composed for the occasion, was first sung. As the sonorous "Amen" died away the voices of the cathedral clergy were heard chanting: "O, Lord Save the Queen," to which the great choir, in a volume of harmonious sound, responded: "And mercifully hear us when we call upon Thee." The bishop of London, in full canonicals, then read a short collect, after which, as her majesty sat with bowed head, the archbishop of Canterbury announced the benediction. Then, amidst the further ringing of bells, the national anthem was sung, and the queen drove on into other scenes. As her majesty entered the gates of Buckingham palace on her return, at two o'clock, a distant gun in Hyde park announced to so much of the world as was not before the gates that the great procession was over. The events long prepared had passed into history.

McPherson's Assailant Set Free. NEW YORK, June 23.—W. V. Van Aken, who, it was alleged, attempted to shoot former United States Senator J. R. McPherson, May 18, was tried for assault in the first degree before Recorder Goff and acquitted.

THE OLD GARDENER.

His Love for Long Words and Nature.

"Do you remember," asked the owner of a large country place, "a man in one of Stockton's stories whose great ambition was to own a dictionary? Well, I have just that fellow in my employ now. My gardener might have furnished the original, in that respect at least, for the character the writer was describing. I always noticed Michael's passion for long words, but it was by accident that he revealed to me one day how much he would like to have a dictionary of his own, in which he might hunt up his beloved polysyllables. I gave him one, and after that his conversation was more resplendent than ever. He was not always quite sure of his ground but he invariably succeeded in producing an impressive result. On one occasion, I remember, my next neighbor had quietly appropriated several bushels of my early bough apples, which grew unfortunately near to the boundary line between the two places. It was not a matter worth making much fuss about, yet I should have liked to stop it, and in talking it over with Michael I said, half to him and half to myself: 'I wonder what would be the best thing to do?'"

"Well, sir," said he, "this is what I think. You'll just do nothing whatever at present; you'll wait till the late russet apples of his is ripe and then you'll gather a heap of them some night and r-r-retailate the compliment!"

"Michael always had a grudge against this particular neighbor, anyway, and held his gardening ideas in special contempt. So one day when I chanced to be the first to discover that Mr. — had cut down one of his most beautiful hedges to make room for something else, I hastened to tell Michael and get his opinion upon the desecration. He had a deep, genuine affection for all growing things and his eyes glowed wrathfully when he heard of the murdered laurel bushes, even though they were outside of his own domain.

"What do you think of the performance?" I asked.

"Mr. —," replied the old fellow, speaking slowly and emphasizing every word, "the man that would do that ought to be excommunicated from the church and denied Christian burial!" Coming from a good Catholic like Michael I think this will stand as a pretty severe sentence."—N. Y. Tribune.
