THE NEBRASKA ADVERTISER

W. W. SANDERS, Publisher.

NEMAHA. - - - - NEBRASKA.

SAFETY IN WEAKNESS.

An iron monarch rode the sea, A nation's hope and pride

Through storm and billows dashing free, It feared no wind or tide; Its banner waved in every land,

With honor halled abroad; Whene'er it hurled its flery brand, The very deep was awed.

The ocean's rage was felt at last;

Its billows set at naught, It gathers up a cyclone's blast, And all its terrors brought;

Tossed, like a ball from hand to hand, A moment poised on high, Then dashed upon the rocky strand, And there the fragments lie;

A trim Physalia floating near, With iridescent sail,' Through all the dark, devoid of fear,

Had sported with the gale. The storm that wrecked the navy's pride, It all outrode with gice And still is dancing on the tide

To beautify the sea. Thus all who boast their native strength Will fail on weakest strain, And sadly find when tried at length,

That all their hopes are vain.

The soul that seeks Jehovah's care, Secure from every wrong, A mighty arm is then made bare, In weakness they are strong!

-Sidney Dyer, Ph. D., in Chicago Standard.

SYNOPSIS.

Minard Hendricks, great detective, just returned from Boston, finds awaiting him an unsigned typewritten letter directing him to apartments in Palace hotel, where he will find remain of Mr. Weldon Caruthers-currently reported for past two weeks to be out of town. Detective seems to connect letter with attempt made on his own life some time previous. Goes with friend, Dr. Lampkin, to investigate.

CHAPTER II.

"You say you know Caruthers?" he

"Very slightly." "See if you recognize him in the ballroom."

Lampkin studied the throng for several minutes, then he went nearer, and standing behind a crowd of men and a bunch of palms he studiously surveyed the ballroom. He went back to the detective.

"See anything of him?" questioned Hendricks, taking his fixed gaze from the rug at his feet.

"No. "Then we must ask for him at the desk." They approached one of the active clerks behind the counter. Hendricks -drew out a visiting card and fingered it, his name downward. "I'd like to see Mr. Weldon Caruthers," he said. The clerk glanced at the key-rack behind him and shook his head. "He hasn't returned yet," he anwered. "He is still out of town."

"Where is he?" asked Hendricks. "I cannot tell you, sir," and the clerk turned to answer a question put by a man in evening dress on his right. "I am very anxious to see Mr.

Caruthers to night," resumed Hendricks, when he could get the clerk's attention again. "It is a very important matter." The man in evening dress had overheard; he paused, interested, "Are you looking for Caruthers?"

be asked.

"I am," replied Hendricks,

"That's odd," smiled the man. "I've seen a dozen people to-night asking about him. We were just discussing his queer conduct and wondering what was the matter with him. He has broken several important engagements without a word of explanation. His valet told my man this afternoon that his master had been called by a It was some urgent business."

moved away to a group of men in the gers round the spot where he lost his smoking-room. Hendricks drew the life to try to give me a clew." clerk aside.

"I am a detective," he said, in a low voice. "Hendricks is my name." "Minard Hendricks?" exclaimed the clerk, in astonishment, his tone and The next trunk was a large square one, body of Caruthers, leaving only the manner suddenly apologetic. "I had no and its lock for several minutes resisted idea-"

have a look into Caruthers' apartment," his own, and no little experience in bone ashes when I see them." broke in the detective. "Don't say a such matters, Hendricks released the word to anyone; but get a pass key, and brass hasp and it fell down with a show my friend and myself up there | sharp click. right away."

sion on his face. Getting a key, he came from behind the counter and amination of two other trunks stored started towards the elevator.

"Not that way," objected Hendricks, detaining him. "Can't we go up the of the closets. rear stairs?"

flight." And he piloted them to the voice. otairs behind the cloakroom. "You'll ! "I don't," ejaculated Hendricks, with examined it minutely.

find the apartments just as Mr. Caruth- | one of his massive from no. which almaster had written him that the room must not be disturbed by anyone." Hendricks paused on the stair.

"Did Mr. Caruthers not inform his man that he was going away?" he nsked.

"No; you see Mr. Caruthers' man is married and lives on the west side, He happened to have a day off and did not know what had become of his master till he got the letter." "I see," remarked Hendricks, and he started on again. Reaching the door opening into Caruthers' apartments, the clerk unlocked it and led them in. The first chamber was a private sitting-room, the dainty pieces of French furniture, draperies and rugs being in perfect order.

"The gas is burning," observed Hendricks, looking up at the cut-glass

"As I said, no one has been in the rooms since Mr. Caruthers went away." "Not even his valet?" asked the detective.

"It looks so, or surely he would have extinguished the gas. It seems to be burning in the next room too."

This chamber was a large luxurious bedroom, and as they entered it Lampkin's imagination prepared itself for a horrible spectacle. To his great relief, however, everything here was also in perfect order. The white lace coverlet lay as smoothly as newly fallen snow, and the sheets and pillows looked as if they had never been used. The clerk now with a look of growing curiosity, if not of incipient horror, stooped down and looked under the bed.

"Nothing there," he said. Then his attitude grew more serious, as he went to the large closets one by one and opened the doors. "There is the bathroom yet," he remarked, with a shudder, his mind perhaps busy with a bit of French history or some recent American horror. "It's getting mighty common nowadays to commit bloody crimes in bathrooms. Do you suspect foul play, sir?"

"You are going entirely too fast," said Hendricks, in a curt tone. "Every matter I choose to investigate need not necessarily be a bloody one." He smiled and added to Lampkin: "My reputation among the people is as red as cranberry sauce."

The clerk bore the reproof with becoming humility. He made no reply and hung back till the detective had opened the door leading to the bathroom. Here the gas was burning also, and the small chamber, with its polished tiled floor and glistening porcelain walls, revealed no hint of blood-

The face of the clerk fell; his appetite for sensation was not to be fed on this

"What time did Mr. Caruthers leave the hotel the night he left?" Hendricks asked him.

"I really don't know, sir," said the clerk. "I am pretty sure he did not mention it at the office, and that is customary among our guests. That is why I thought there might have been some underhand-"

"Leave your pass key with me," interrupted the detective, coldly. "My friend and I want to have a little private talk. When you go down, don't mention our being here."

The clerk reluctantly laid the key on a table.

"I'll not give it away, sir." He moved slowly towards the door. "If you want anything, ring. I'll be on the lookout, and will run up myself."

"Good," said Hendricks, "you are very kind." The detective followed him to the outer door and closed it after him. Then he came back into the bedroom. "I hope this is only a hoax, after all." observed the doctor. "What are you going to do next?" Hendricks shrugged his broad shoulders; it amounted to a shudder. "We are going to look through those trunks-for a trunk and the rest." "Is it really so bad as that?"

"My blasted premonition-which faculty in my make-up has always been a mystery to me-has hold of me with its four claws," said Hendricks. "I can't explain it, doctor, but the minnight telegram to Philadelphia and had the I entered that door and saw the written him that he would be detained | gas burning so brightly I felt murder | stood, his back to the doctor, a hand on there for a couple of weeks. I presume in the air. Sometimes on a day like either side of the vessel. Then he liftthis-at a crisis like this-I imagine The speaker lighted a cigar and that the spirit of the murdered man lin- | acor, and placed it on the table,

Lampkin shuddered as the detective laid hold of the nearest steamer-trunk

This trunk, also, contained nothing The clerk nodded, a flurried express of a suspicious nature, and the same res speak in a matter-of-fact tone. "That sults were produced by a careful exin the bathroom and a dress-suit case of heavy leather which was found in one of the flesh."

"Ah, I certainly feel better," cried "Sure," said the clerk. "It's only one | Lampkin, a triumphant ring in his ers left them. His valet said that his | ways made his great brow resemble a miniature jutting erag.

"And why?" "Decause my anonymous correspondent says I shall find the remains of and I believe on my soul be meant what he said."

cation from his master in Philadel-

"I'll bet my life it was forged," Lampkin started, and then he gazed into the detective's eyes steadily.

"I can't follow you, and I won't try. Your mind darts out after things I never would dream of. Do you think you may find a trace of the missing man

"If my thinker would operate smoothly." This with a forced grin, "My trip to Boston has fagged me out. I am not normal. But it will not surprise me to find out that the same man wrote to the valet that wrote to me."

"If so you have a deep villain to deal with."

"As deep as the crucible of hell can turn out.'

The detective sat down in a chair near the bed and, taking from his pocket the anonymous letter, he studied it in silence. After a minute he said, re-

"You will observe he does not say I shall find the body of Caruthers here, but the remains, and he has underscored the word heavily. Furthermore, he boasts of the skill with which the crime has been accomplished; that, old man, means something."

"But it seems to me that you have looked into every possible nook and cranny," said the doctor.

As if under a sudden inspiration Hendricks sprang up, and going to the bed he pushed aside the silken curtains of the canopy, turned down the sheets and doubled up the mattress. Then he drew himself up and began to examine the bric-a-brae about the room. He Stumped with his knuckles a marble statue of Venus de Milo in a corner, and then stood still in the center of the room and stared at the articles of ornament on the mantel-piece. He walked slowly backward to the doctor and laid a hand on his shoulder, and pointed to a large covered Japanese vase, shaped like an ancient urn.

"Doctor," he said, "the man who selected all the bric-a-brac in this room did not select that vase."

"It does seem a little out of harmony," admitted Lampkin. "Rather cheaper than the rest, don't you think?"

"It is a disgrace to such a collection," returned the detective, "besides it has been crowded in between those beautiful bronze pieces. Old man, I have an idea."

HE SAW HIM PICK UP SOMETHING.

Lampkin said nothing as he watched his friend place a chair near the mantel-piece and mount it. The chair raised the detective so high that the cover of the vase was on a level with his chin. Hendricks removed the cover and looked into the vessel. Lampkin saw him pick up something inside the vase, examine it and lay it beck. For a moment the detective ed it, cautiously stepped down to the

"Prepare to be harrified, old man," he said, grimly. "It is here."

Lampkin started. "Youdon't mean-" "You needn't look unless you want and began to unstrap it. It was empty | to," frowned the detective, "But our save for some clothing in the bottom, such fiend has actually eremated the jeweled hand of his victim to prevent the efforts of the detective to unfasten there being any doubt as to the identity "It is most important that I should it. Finally, however, sided by a key of of the ashes. It was cremation; I know

> Lampkin got up and peered into the jar, turning the phastly object over on the bed of ashes beneath.

> "There is no odor," he said, trying to is strange."

"Embalmed," said Hendricks, "I saw indications of it in the punctures

'You are right," agreed the doctor. "Let me see a moment," with these words the detective sprang to the vase, and, picking up the grewsome object,

"I have only one isolated clew," he said, putting the severed hand back on the ashes.

"What is that?" "In his effort to cut and wrench this hand from the joint at the wrist, the Weldon Caruthers in these apartments, murderer allowed his sharp mails to sink into the flesh. The marks did not show at the time, but the process of "But that man downstairs said Ca- decomposition has brought them out rathers' valet has received a communi- distinctly. Doctor, the fellow who did the job manicures his finger-nails to charp points, as is the vogue among socicty men of a certain class."

Lampkin made an examination. "You are certainly right," he said, returning the hand to the vase, "Shrewd and cautious as the perpetrator evidently was that did not occur to liim."

"God has never yet made it possible for a human mind to be full of a hellish deed and at the same-time master details that will completely overcome detection," was Hendricks' reply.

"You do not think that the body could have been reduced to ashes in these apartments," said Lampkin, tentatively Hendricks shook his head, and point-ashes of a wood fire. "No, this is the only fireplace and it has not been used for a fortnight," ed to the open fireplace where lay the

"Are you sure?" incredulously. "Quite sure. This chimney seems to come straight down from the roof, and raindrops have fallen and left their imprints here. It rained two weeks ago and has been clear ever since."

"I would never have thought of that." "It is my business to think of everything." Lampkin's face betrayed the birth of an important idea. "Surely," he said, "the body could not easily have been removed for the purpose of cremation elsewhere without being dismembered. Perhaps if you made a careful examination you might find traces of its having been cut up."

"Thanks for the suggestion," said Hendricks. Lampkin watched him as he went into the bathroom and clesely examined the porcelain tub and white-

"No," he said, coming back. "I think he managed to remove the body in its entirety.' "You think that?" remarked the doctor, not convinced. "Yes; it would be an easy thing to do. As Caruthers was supposed to be leaving, it would be natural for him to take a trunk, and his luggage going out would not attract much attention.' "Good heavens!" exclaimed the doctor. "In his own trunk!" At this juncture the door leading into the corridor swung open and the clerk who had shown them upstairs entered suddenly, his eyes alighting on the severed hand which lay across the somewhat narrow mouth of the vase.

"My Lord!" he exclaimed, his eyes bulging from their sockets, "has-has he been murdered, Mr. Hendricks?"

An expression of deep annoyance settled on the face of the detective.

"Yes," he said. "But leave us alone for a few minutes, and please don't say anything about this down in the office just yet. We would be interrupted by sight-seers."

The clerk thrust his white, horrified face forward and peered into the vase. "Surely not-not cremated, Mr. Hendricks!" he gasped.

"That's about the size of it," retorted the detective. He went to the door and held it open. The clerk took the hint and backed out of the room.

"Don't lay it to me if this gets out sooner than you wish," he said. "A member of the detective force was down there in citizen's clothes and recognized you when you first came in. He had heard of the remarks going round about Mr. Caruthers' absence, and seeing you on hand made him more curious. He has Mr. Caruthers' man down there now, asking him questions. It seems nothing has been seen of Mr. Caruthers since he had the row with Mr. Arthur Gielow at the club." Hendricks leaned against the door-facing. "They had a row, eh?"

"That's the general report, sir." "Did you hear what it was about?" "Some dispute over a woman, I

"Who was the woman?"

"Miss Dorothy Huntington was the name I heard mentioned."

"Ah," broke in Lampkin, coming forward. "I remember-But Hendricks was bowing to the clerk and smiling, as if to denote that the conversation were at an end. ITO BE CONTINUED.1

Another Purist at Large.

"What is your objection to women's clubs, professor? Haven't they as good a right to organize themselves into clubs for good fellowship, mutual entertainment or instruction as men have 2"

"Oh, yes, madam. I don't question helr right to do anything they please. My objection to women's clubs, if I have any, is that nearly all the club women I happen to be acquainted with pronounce it progr'm."-Chicago Tribune.

One.

Tom-I will venture to say that there isn't one great city in this country or Europe on whose streets the bicycle is not a familiar sight. Dick-There is one.

What?" "Venice."-Up-to-Date.

FLATTERED THE EMPRESS.

China's Ruler Looks With Favor Upon Jung Lu, Who Has His Meart Centered Upon Usurping the Throne.

Port Townsend, Wash., June 30 .-According to advices brought from the orient by steamship Glenogle, China still continues in a state of uncertainty which borders on revolution. The China Discussion says the empress dowager has pinned her faith in Jung Lu, who for many years has had his mind and heart centered on usurping the throne. He has a friend at court in the personage of one of the chief cunuchs, through whom he has succeeded in flattering the empress dowager to such an extent that troops have been increased and he has been placed in command. He now believes himself invulnerable. The empress dowager has been his tool and the general feeling now prevails that his next move will be to cast her aside and place himself on the

THEY HAD THE PLAGUE.

The Steamer Nippon Maru Brought the Disease from the Far East-Bodles of Two Victims Cremated.

San Francisco, June 30.-Dr. Babata, bacteriologist of the board of health. has just returned a report of his examinations of the glands of the two Japanese who were drowned while trying to escape from the steamer Nippon Maru, now held in quarantine on account of three suspicious deaths which occurred on the vessel on her trip from China and Japan to this port via Honolulu. Dr. Babata found the bacilli to be those of the bubonic plague, and, to make his determination doubly sure, will propagate their - owth. The bodies of the Japanese and Dr. Lawler, the keasard, lux this city, states that the face of a chi ger of the disease bree Brooklyn, city, as every precarr's chair nead taken to prevent anyter part of his fa

Victoria, B. himself. The barbe chi, of the stear he unauthorized act that in the south younger. ates he was asled against emerger AND PRESENT.

teers, whose we very crude, whan Patristelan Points of them born, They are, howe of patriotism and state that they will not yield to the Americans, though the whole of the islands are destroyed.

Will Otts Succeed Alger? Washington, June 30 .- It is said at the white house that Gen, Harrison Gray Otis, who recently returned from Manila, will be a guest of the president the last of the week. It is reported that the post of secretary of war will be offered him. With the report is coupled the statement that the president will ask Secretary Alger to retire on account of the criticisms of the administration by Gov. Pingree in connection with the governor's support of Secretary Alger for the Michigan senatorship.

Aguinaldo Wants Information. Manila, June 30.—One of the most prominent Filipinos living in Manila yesterday morning received verbal instructions directly from Aguinaldo, who is at Tarlac, instructing him to make the most complete report possible of the situation in Manila, both political and military. This is capable of a double interpretation. Possibly Aguinaldo desires to know what the chances are in the event of his surrender, or, it is possible, that he wants to obtain information as to what places are bringing produce into the country. Help for Tornado Sufferers.

Hudson, Wis., June 30 .- Chairman H. Ingram, of the New Richmond relief committee, has issued an official circular to the public as the first fruits of their investigations. The circular states that a careful estimate shows the money loss from the tornado to be $750,000. Subscriptions thus far amount to only about $80,000, a large portion of which has been spent in clearing away the debris and in lending temporary assistance to the people.

Terrible Storm at Morgantown, W. Va. Cincinnati, June 30.-A Morgantown, W. Va., special says: A terrific storm visited this section last night and dozens of houses were unroofed. The wind blew like a hurricane. A rain fall of several inches accompanied the storm. Bransom Troy was struck by lightning and killed. Tremendous damage was done to crops of every description. Bridges were washed away and roads are impassable.

Eleven Found Watery Graves.

Toledo, June 30 .- Eleven lives were lost by the foundering of the steam barge Margaret Olwill in Lake Erie yesterday morning. Duncan Coyle, a deckhand, whose residence is Port Huron, is the only survivor so far as known. . He was rescued from the wreckage after being in the water for over four hours.

Slew Him Because He Snored. New York, June 30 .- The coror jury brought in a verdict that If-J. Ramsey was murdered by his ! while she was temporarily insancut his throat and gave as a I'll that he spored. As Mrs. Ramand on her way across the Bridge und to the Tombs she attempted a hatpin into her neck.