Some of the Auburn papers published that T. A. Lorange said that many deaths in the terrible storm at Galveston was caused by lightning and that the electric storm was also the cause of the bodies turning black so quickly. Mr. Lorange desires this corrected as he never made this assertion. There was no electricity noticeable—no thunder and lightning at all. The bodies of drowned persons would naturally turn black in a very few hours after being exposed to the hot sun. The theory of electricity was also advanced to account for the fact that a great many bodies had little or no clothing on but Mr. Lorange says the wind and water with the floating rubbish was sufficient to account for this. Many of the living had the clothing torn off.

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D Williams of Manchester, Mich., says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that s'y could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own work." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, backache, fainting and dizzy spells. It is a godsend to weak, sickly, run-down people. Cure guaranteed. Only 50c. Sold by W W Keeling, druggist.
