Hon. T. J. Majors made an eloquent address to a crowded house memorial day and among other things said "Memorial day is the old soldiers' Sabbath" but lost a golden opportunity when he failed to impress upon their minds that too many of them only have one Sabbath in the year.

The west part of town was thrown into a fever of excitement Monday by the report that Maudie Horner was lost. She had left home very early in the morning to pick berries and was expected home about nine or ten o'clock. Failing to return at noon her mother went to where she supposed Maudie was at work but she had not been there and as the berry pickers had most of them been home for sometime it was surmised at once that some terrible calamity had overtaken her. Searching parties went in all directions searching woods and hills, runners were sent to all berry patches to see if she had been there, and no trace of her could be found until about 1:30 p. m. when she with some companions returned from Dr. McComas', where they had been at work. In the excitement no one had thought to go out of town so far in search of her, but "all is well that ends well."
