A man's greatness is seen in his recognition of goodness.

The cotton crop is safe now. Congress gives $250,000 to fight the boll weevil.

It sometimes happens that the person who gets a $10 marriage fee profits by the mistakes of others.

Mr. Wu's admirers in America are glad to see that even in China it is hard to keep a good man down.

The Russians are carnivorous; the Japs are vegetarians. That argues badly for the latter in a scrap.

It has come to pass that nations do almost as much blustering and bluffing as prize fighters before getting into action.

Before Russia and Japan get through the Chinese papers will doubtless be able to announce some big real estate transfers.

When a woman attempts to work off a bad word compliment on a man she always spoils the effect by making a serial story of it.

When young Mr. Rockefeller began to teach in Sunday school he probably did not anticipate that his class would comprise the whole country.

David Kaphokohokimokewonah has been appointed a postmaster in Hawaii. Let us hope that Dave's administration will be O. K.

In the last three years only six people in a total of 32,000,000 traveling in Pullmans have been killed. Perhaps, after all, $2 for an upper berth is not extravagant.

English women are rapidly breaking away from the habit of kissing one another. This being leap year, there is no reason why such a foolish habit should be popular anywhere.

The Emperor of Korea would feel easier in his mind if he knew that the winning side would be willing to keep him on the pay roll after the war between Russia and Japan is over.

A New York girl 23 years of age has been arrested for taking other people's money with which to speculate in Wall street. The fact that she has been arrested indicates that she got on the wrong side of the market.

A literary column in an Eastern paper says that out of the 80,000,000 in the United States, 80,000,000 have written books. We are slowly growing to a conclusion that any man who writes a book ought to be kicked. We may be wrong.

The "original hero" of Amelle Rive's novel, "The Quick or the Dead," expired the other day at Richmond. It will be news to a large majority of the people who read novels now that there ever was such a story as "The Quick or the Dead."

The London Lancet says it is not the nicotine in tobacco that hurts you, but the poisonous gas called carbon monoxide in the smoke. One ounce of tobacco gives no less than one-fifth of a pint of carbon monoxide gas when smoked in the form of cigarettes. The last dude who smoked one in the office may have thrown out a fifth of a pint, but we would have sworn that it was a whole gas main full.

It is a strange thing to express the value of novels in terms of wood, but an English periodical has lately been estimating what it calls the "tree value" of the modern novel. Since paper is made of cellulose, and the chief source of supply of cellulose is timber, it is estimated that nine popular novels have swept away 4,000 trees. According to this, every popular novelist ought in duty bound to spend at least a part of his spare time in planting trees.

Our transatlantic cousins are often a subject of jest on the score of their clothes. This is only partly fair, however. The working out of their ideas is frequently defective, but for one guiding principle they deserve unlimited credit; if an Englishman believes that a certain style becomes him personally it takes a yoke of oxen and a two-inch chain to drag him away from it. Within certain well-defined lines English dressers will follow each other like a flock of sheep, but when it comes to the treatment of their individual peculiarities they have their own ideas, and they stick to them.

For untold ages the Japanese people have expressed themselves on paper in "ideographic" characters; that is, in characters which stand for words or ideas rather than sounds, as do the alphabets in use among Western nations. Now it is proposed to abandon that system for the English alphabet. The change would mean the real opening of Japan to the outside world, and consequent progress in Western learning. The press of the country will be enabled to speak more fully and more intelligently to foreigners who have mastered the spoken language, and many will master it who have heretofore been discouraged by the difficulties. Manufacturers and traders, too, will find their path smoothed. But think of the courage necessary to make such a change! Americans consider themselves a brave people, yet every proposal to substitute the metric system for our own antiquated and inconvenient weights and measures is met with whines or protests.

Attention is frequently called to the wide distribution of the stock of American corporations. A writer in the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science has compiled some interesting figures on the subject of the ownership of railways. The number of stockholders in a group of prominent railway companies varies from six thousand to twenty-nine thousand for each company, and the average holdings of the stockholders are about ten thousand dollars. The number of persons interested in the prosperity of the railways is greater than the number of stockholders. Savings banks, insurance companies and other institutions hold vast amounts of railway bonds, and every depositor in a savings bank, and every shareholder in any company which invests its assets in bonds, thus becomes in a limited way a capitalist. It is impossible to estimate the number of these indirect owners of railroad property, but it is certainly many millions, and in the aggregate they are a large fraction of the whole population. The stock of many of the industrial corporations is more widely distributed than that of the railway companies, and men and women who have no practical knowledge of the steel or the oil business are drawing dividends from the stock of the oil and the steel companies. This used to be a nation of small tradesmen and manufacturers, and each man was his own master. It is fast becoming a nation of stockholders, who combine to employ as servants the best expert brains of the country to manage the business in which they invest their capital. Even the farmers own stock in the creamery or the grain elevator or the cotton gin.

In the last analysis the lesson of the Iroquois Theater fire in Chicago is this: Human life in our day is cheap. Material things are more than men. The managers of the Iroquois were not sinners above all others. A few Chicago theaters were safer than this one. Many of them were not. In any of these playhouses a panic would likely have brought on a calamity. The proof is to be found in the fact that the Chicago Mayor closed all theaters until such time as the owners should provide safety appliances in accordance with law. And the situation in Chicago is the situation in almost every city. Our civilization is above the Aztec in this, that we sacrifice human life incidentally and through neglect while the Aztecs offered up human beings deliberately. The loss of human life in train wrecks, in building operations, in field, factory and stores is less spectacular than the Iroquois holocaust, but as inhuman. Blood and flesh are less than dividends. Take the theater as an illustration. The dollar mark is over it all. Art is prostituted to drift. A play is gauged entirely by the box office receipts. Theoretically the drama exists for the entertainment and instruction of the people. It exists in fact for the profit of the managers. What is the remedy for the man destroying commercialism of our modern life? Public opinion must be revitalized and the public conscience must be aroused. The communal sense of right and wrong must be keener than it is. And above all, there must be a higher regard for humanity, a moral vital feeling of brotherhood. Let the laws punish the violators to the limit. Compel a decent regard for the public safety. But—Deeper than law, behind the law, below the law, must be the education of the public conscience.

"No Vowel" Town. Many places have curious names but apparently there is only one place which has a name without any vowels. That place is the little hamlet of W near Paris. We being an unpronounced name, the inhabitants of the hamlet have transformed it into "d'Us," but this change has not been sanctioned legally, and on all the official records the name W still appears. hamlet has 117 inhabitants, and its sole attractions are the Chateau d'Osny, which has been for many years in the possession of Edmond About's family, and the Chateau de Vigny, which is one of the best specimens of the Renaissance style of architecture known. So far as is known, there is only one person in Europe at present who has a name without any vowels, and that is M. Srb, the mayor of Prague. Strangers to the city who find it necessary to interview the mayor take care first of all to learn the proper pronunciation.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address: F. J.
