D. H. Clark is doing considerable experimenting with corn this year. He has an early reddish colored corn that is now good feed and almost hard enough to crib. The ears are about ten inches long and of good size. Doc also has some white corn that is later but is fine corn. One kind is a long eared variety but has the disadvantage of the ears gradually getting smaller.

Another kind has very large ears but on account of the large cob it remains sappy and does not mature unless we have a late fall. Doc has crossed the two varieties and gets one that combines the good qualities to a great extent and eliminates the defects of the two original varieties. The cross has good size and length and the cob is much smaller than the second variety. Doc is not satisfied but will continue to experiment.

Patrons of the Nemaha schools:

I come among you as a stranger, but I hope it may be so for a very short time only. Our common interest if nothing else should draw us together. Dealing thus in matters of moment to all we should work together with a mutual understanding, each seeking to add his mite for the good of the cause. So I solicit your co-operation in the work for the coming year.

To have a school it is necessary to have pupils, (they are the prime consideration), a teacher and a community loyal to both the above. The pupils should be made to feel that it is for them that the school exists and that they are in a measure responsible for its success and usefulness. The teacher should have not only an intense interest in the pupils' school work, but that interest should be broad enough to include the whole community and especially the pupils' interests in that community. The patrons should support the school, not only by their tax, but by word and act as well. If there comes a time when there is a misunderstanding between the patron and the teacher, whichever fails to understand should go to the other and seek an explanation. This will always be more satisfactory on the part of both, and result in more friendly relations between teachers pupils and patrons.

So I feel the better we understand each other the more likely we are to have a successful school, and that is what we all desire.

Hoping it may be realized, I am,
Yours very truly,
CLIFFORD HENDRICKS.
