Word comes to this city that the good roads people will return on or about the 15th to resume work on the bottoms east of town. This is welcome news as at present there places in the bottoms almost impossible while the macadamized section is as good as a paved street.—Granger.

The road along the St. Deroine "narrows" has been almost impassable on account of a slide. This roadway is cut in the side of the bluff, and next to the river were logs to keep the dirt from sliding down the hillside. But the recent rains caused the dirt, logs and all to slide in the river, and the bluff above the road slid down also.

John Whittaker of Auburn made a find of coal last week on the farm of J. P. Quillen just south of Brownville. While the coal is not of the best quality it is a very fair grade. The find was made sixteen feet from the edge of the bluff into which he was tunneling. Mr. Whittaker has secured a lease on the land and is to pay 75 cents per ton for all the coal he can dig and sell.

We received the following announcement a few days ago:

"Josephine Louise Field, born March 27, 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Field, Sleepy Hollow Farm, Shenandoah, Iowa." We congratulate the parents on the advent of another jewel in their home. Grandpa and Grandma A. L. P. Thompson can hardly wait until they can go up and see the little lady.

Auburn favors licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors by a majority of six, and Brownville comes nearer the mark and has only four majority and in both cities several times as many of those who are opposed to the license system, as would have been required to turn the scale, forgot to vote on the question. Please stand aside for a few moments for we are disposed to use some language more expressive than really nice.—Granger.

A Peru dispatch says: On account of the coal strike now on the normal school would be entirely destitute of fuel for its furnaces and lighting plant were it not for the fact that today many loads are being hauled from the local mine to the normal bins. The last two cars of coal hauled to the state normal were taken up somewhere along the line and used by the railroad it is declared.

The only difficulty in securing coal of the development company at Peru is the bad condition of the road. As much will be hauled at this time as possible as the roads are now fairly good. Regarding the use of this coal Prof. H. B. Duncanson said that it is as good or better than that previously burned.

There is a bill before the United States congress that is of considerable importance to the corn growing section of the west, and that is a bill for un-taxed denaturalized alcohol, such as is used in the arts and manufactures and cannot be used as a beverage. The manufacture of this alcohol from corn stalks bids fair to add much to the wealth of the corn producing sections. The commissioner of agriculture, when before the committee, said that the stalks from an acre of corn, after the ears had been gathered, would produce about 170 gallons of alcohol, which would be worth at present prices about 70 cents per gallon. Think of what this means to the farmers of Johnson county could the worthless corn stalks be used in making alcohol. The alcohol would take the place of coal oil for lighting, gasoline for power, and deal a hard blow to Rockefeller. Besides this it is used in large quantities in an endless number of manufacturing industries. If congress passes the bill the farmers of this section will quit plowing their stalks under, for they will be worth as much as the gathered corn, and Tecumseh will have an alcohol factory.—Tecumseh Journal.

C. P. Barker came near going in the Missouri river, mail wagon, team, mail and all, Wednesday. He was carrying the mail on route 2. The narrows this side of St. Deroine had been in bad shape for several days on account of slides, and Press had not attempted to go that way Monday or Tuesday. But he was told at St. Deroine that the road was passable, so he started. When he got to the narrows he found the bluff had slid down over the road, but thought he could make it with care. He stood on the step of the mail wagon next the bluff to keep it from upsetting. The mud was very deep and when he got in about the worst place one pony fell down. Press stepped off in the mud and got the pony up and then the team commenced to back. As it was a descent of over 100 feet to the river, with nothing to break the fall, Press's hair almost stood on end. He struck the ponies with the whip and they gave a lunge forward, jerking him down under the wagon in the mud. The ponies stopped again. Press managed to scramble out of the mud and started up again and this time made it all right. He doesn't want such an experience again. When the ponies backed one wheel went over the edge of the bluff. A few more feet would have taken all in the river. Press will not go over that portion of the route until this road is in good shape.
