The prohibitionists, at their recent conference at Auburn, decided not to put a ticket in the field in this county this year. They are especially interested in having a county option law passed by the next legislature and will vote for candidates for the legislature who will pledge themselves to favor county option. In this way their votes will count for something. For once they have acted wisely, and did what we have been advising them to do for many years.

Geo. L. Thorp, a fruit and produce dealer from Crawford, Nebr., has been in Nemaha several days during the past week. He bought two car loads of peaches from F. E. Hoover & Son for immediate shipment, besides a lot in baskets, and will probably buy more peaches and apples later. He also bought a lot of roasting ears from John Colerick. Mr. Thorp, who has been in the fruit buying business for years, going as far south as Texas, says the orchard of F. E. Hoover & Son is the finest he ever saw.

We had a nice shower Wednesday morning.

We had the pleasure on Monday of meeting a brother of C. E. Ord of Auburn, who lives at Seattle, Washington, and Mr. Reeder of Boston, Mass., a cousin of the Ord brothers. Both of these gentlemen, one from the extreme west and the other from the extreme east of the United States, are confident of a republican victory this fall.

Recently we were talking to a number of democrats when one said: "Do you know that Taft is an infidel?" A second man said: "No, that is a mistake, he is a Catholic." A third one said: "No, he is a Unitarian." If democrats are going to circulate this kind of stories as political thunder they should get together and agree on which one to use.

Ben Parker is a great fellow to trade horses, but Miles Knapp came near making a trade for Ben Tuesday without his knowing it. Ben fed his team at the livery barn and when he got ready to go Miles brought out another team and began to hitch to the machine wagon. Ben said he didn't object to the exchange only he didn't like to have his horses traded off unless he had the fun of making the trade.

During the Old Settlers' picnic Walter Hadlock noticed some suspicious actions by a man named Jacob Hinkle of Stella, who had a stand on the grounds but who made frequent trips with other men to a wagon. Mr. Hadlock called the attention of Marshal Scovill to the wagon and he demanded of Hinkle that a locked box be opened. When this was done ten pint bottles of whisky were found, which were confiscated. Later Hinkle was arrested and taken to Auburn. On Monday he was brought before Judge Parriott for trial but on application of defendant trial was continued for thirty days.

A Freak Stalk of Corn.
Last Friday J. L. Curtwright brought into the Advertiser office an odd stalk of corn. It is about 8 feet high, and the blade reach over three feet each side of the stalk. The blades, instead of growing as usual, come out on opposite sides of the stalk which is flat for the first four feet. There are ten shoots for corn, one at each blade for the lower ten blades. If each would have matured into a good ear of corn it would have been heavily loaded. The corn was raised by Steve Colerick, in Nemaha.

Ray Clark says he had a stalk of corn that had seven shoots and two good ears of corn.

E. J. Maxwell has a stalk of corn nailed on the telephone pole in front of his house that is 14 feet high. One morning it had an empty beer bottle on it, but Ed says it didn't grow there.

Who will be next with a corn story?
