OLD JOHN, THE QUAIL MAN. A Quaint Fellow Whose Pets Are a Boys

Away out near the ocean, just as you turn to the right toward the Cliff House, lives an old man in a little cottage, who waters horses for a living, says a San Francisco correspondent.

"John" everybody calls him, and it has been so long since he heard his last name that he has almost forgotten it himself. His home is covered with climbing vines and shaded by trees, and he has quite a happy life collect-ing dimes and quarters from the men who water their dripping horses at his trough. They always pay him some-thing for loosening the check rein. But, besides the few words he exchanges with the drivers, old John has little company excepting his quail. He has several hundred of these usually timid birds that he has tamed, so that they fly all about him, perch on his shoulders, and eat grain from his hands. Every morning and evening he feeds them. He would rather go without his own breakfast or supper than neglect his beloved quail. Near his little cottage is the big sprinkle the park roads get their supply of water. It is always moist around there, and there is a big bare space where John spreads the grain and crumbs that his pets like to eat. It takes a good deal of wheat and barley to feed two or three hundred quail, and John spends a good many of the dimes he makes watering horses to pay for the provender. But it is always there every morning and every evening. In the morning, when the wind i blowing over the great Pacific, and the dense fog hovers over the park like a wet blanket, John's quail are nestling in the underbrush just back of his house. Their brown feathers match the dead leaves so closely, and they keep so motionless that a stranger might walk through their midst without knowing they were there. But when they hear the grain thrown from TRENTON, N. Rapid Work with the Brush.

In the window of a Broadway store stands a man who paints a picture about two feet and a half long and two feet wide in four minutes by the watch. He works rapidly but without apparent haste. He places a canvas in position on an easel. His paints and brushes are conveniently disposed upon the easel and upon a table near at hand. With a few quick sweeps of a brush from side to side he covers the upper and lower parts of the canvas with solid brown, leaving the middle for the moment untouched. Then as he plys his brushes mountains and he plys his brushes monutains and hills and fields appear. A few more touches and a lake comes into view movements he puts upon the canvas masses of green, which somehow look familiar, but you don't stop to think about them; you see him now with another brush painting upon the lake set suffuses the picture. Zip! Zip! birds anan, of Virginia, were then introduced and sworn in by the speaker pro tem.

The clerk was instructed to notify the senate of the election of Mr. McMillin as speaker pro tem.

Trees, sure enough; an involuntary murmur of applause follows the swift revealing strokes. Now bzt! and the gazers almost hold their breaths, for it seemed as though at last he had marred the picture; but he hasn't. He's on the home stretch now, going faster than ever. His brush flashes along the hillside, a rail fence runs down the slope and ends at the water's edge. The picture is finished. He lifts it from the easel and puts it, while the crowd applauds, in a big gilt frame that rests on another easel in the center of the window. Time, four minutes.

-N. Y. Sun. Deep-sea Sponges.

"Some of the most beautiful things that live in the ocean are the sponge of the great depth, which have often very curious and interesting forms, said a naturalist to a reporter. 'Not least remarkable are the so-called 'sea "Not nests,' which are in the form of spheres or sometimes egg-shaped.

'The outer coat of one of these specimens is a complicated network, over which a delicate membrane is spread. An ornamental frill adorns the upper part, while the lower portion throws out a maze of glossy filaments like fine white hairs. "These hairs penetrate the semi-fluid mud in every direction, thus holding the sponge in its place, while a con-tinuous current of water is drawn by waving cilia' through all parts of the mass, passing out by a hole at the top.

"Another singular sponge is the 'glass rope,' which sends down into the mud a coiled wisp of filaments as thick as a knitting needle. The latter opens out into a brush, fixing the creature in place after the manner of screw pile. "Still another remarkable sponge is found in the deep water off the Lof-foden Islands. It spreads out into a thin circular cake, surrounded by what looks like a fringe of white floss silk. 'Yet another curiosity is the 'eupectella' sponge of the Pailippines, which lives embedded to its lid in the mud and suppported by a lovely frill."-Washington Star.
