the American Coutinent. Ignatius Donnelly finds a supporter his Atlantis theory in Sir Daniel Wilson, president of the university of Toronto, who declares, after a great deal of search, that the lost Atlantis was not a myth, but that it was really the continent of America. He accounts for its disappearance from view in a different way, but that is merely incidental.

Donnelly's theory was that the land was submerged by some great volwho escaped to the continents of Europe and Asia came the tradition of the deluge. Sir Daniel rejects this explanation as being disproved by the fact that there are no traces of such volcanic action either on the continent or in the ocean bed. He believes that the ancient Egyptians, the most progressive and adventurous people of ancient times, discovered the continent, but that in the decline both of their learning and power, it became lost to view and existed at the time our knowledge of Egypt begins merely as a shadowy tradition.

It is his opinion that traces of the Egyptians of those days are to be sought in the ruined cities of Central America, whose origin has never been determined or even been made the basis of any reasonable theory. Such a discovery would furnish a substantiul basis for the legend of the lost Atlantis and the theory invests those wonderful ruins with a new interest for the antiquarians.

HE HADN'T ASKED HER.

Jones Was Gushing, But He Drew the Liuo at Business.

A young lady who is really very popular in Washington society tells me the following on herself:

The summer she spent at a mountain resort in Virginia, where she was the recipient, of course, of a number of attentions from the men, both young and old. Among the most persistent was a young man whom I shall conceal by calling Jones. He was very devoted. He took the girl walking and driving. He spent money on her, sending candy and flowers, which cost high at certain seasons. One evening there was a hop at the hotel. Between the dances Mr. Jones proposed a promenade. The night was beautiful and the air balmy. The young lady consented. (Notice that the plot thickens and hickens.) Jones told her he thought she was the most charming person he had ever met; that she was everything that a man could desire for a wife. He even said he loved her. young woman, not a little frightened,

"But you know, Mr. Jones, I could never marry you."

He stopped short in his rhapsody, and replied:

"I haven't asked you yet."

Bottling Tears in Persia.

The custom of bottling tears is peculiar to the people of Persia. There it constitutes an important part of the obsequies of the dead. As the mourners are sitting round and weeping the master of ceremonies presents each one with a piece of cotton, wool or sponge, with which to wipe away the tears. This cotton, wool or sponge is afterward squeezed into a bottle, and the tears are preserved as a pow-erful and efficacious restorative for hom every other medicine has failed to revive.

A Jap Kindergarten.

The kindergarten at Kobo, Japan. established by Miss Annie L. Howe, is one of the most successful of such stitutions that have ever been tarted anywhere. Its training school attached graduates large classes of schers, who find no difficulty in puring places, so interested are the panese throughout the empire in the system. A valuable part of Miss Howe's service has been the translation of a volume of kindergarten songs into the Japanese language.

Yachts Were Always Pleasure Vessels The term "yacht" is derived from the Danish word jaght, meaning a chase; hence yachting is the chasing of one vessel after another, and, accordingly yachting and yacht racing are synonymous expressions. A yacht is and always has been essentially a pleasure craft. History does not tell us where, when or under what circumstances yachts were first built, but it is certain that they are of ancient ori-gin and were only owned by royal persons and great nobles.
