LIFE ON PITCAIRN ISLAND.

Descendants of the Mutineers of the Bounty Prolific and Long-Lived. Probably no community in the world of two hundred and fifty odd souls can show such a mortality record as that of the Pitcairn islanders in recent years. For six years, ending in February, 1893, only one death had occurred, and that was the result of an accident. They are a prolific people. It is only 104 years since the nine mutineers and the brown women they stole away from Tahiti landed on Pitcairn. Their descendants now number 800, most of whom live on Norfolk island, which some of them colonized in 1857. It will not be very long before the rock of Pitcairn, with an of only about a mile square, will again become too crowded for comfort. Then a second exodus from the home its denizens love so well will become a necessity. It was forty odd years ago that the community thought it for the common good to send one of their women to America to perfect herself in the arts of sewing and housewifery. They know more of the world now, though they have lost little of their charming simplicity. They are admitting more strangers and intermarrying more freely with them. The names of the mutineers are still most prominent in the two colonies, but at last they are in the minority. The islanders have been seen in San Francisco and in Sydney. Save in some physical peculiarities, they show hardly a trace of their half Polynesian origin, and they seem destined to become more and more closely identified with the superior race of their fathers.

BOOTED OUT OF THE ROOM.

The Fate of a Young Society Man Who Gave Way to Curiosity. The curiosity of a Pittsburg society young man prompted him to impersonate a waiter at a private dinner given to two footlight favorites in a hotel recently. The curious young man was well acquainted with the men who were giving the dinner, and upon seeing the preparations for a royal feast was anxious to see who the lady guests might be. He thought he'd have a joke, so he persuaded the proprietor to allow him to act as waiter to the party. After donning the usual attire of a table servant he entered the room carrying a bottle of wine in one hand and a napkin thrown over his arm. He was recognized by his friends, but no sign of recognition passed. He immediately, without the least expression on his face, began to serve the fluid. In filling one of the hosts' glasses he split some wine on the table. This caused an apparent burst of anger from the gentleman at the head of the merry board. He arose and, with language none to mild, commenced to abuse the shamming waiter for his carelessness, imputing drunkenness. The waiter never smiled, and all the while the ladies were becoming more and more terrified at the impending fight. Finally, amid the shrieks of the fair ones, the host took the counterfeit by the back of the collar, causing him to make an ignominious exit with the assistance of a boot. The men then sat down and had a good laugh, and an explanation soon quieted the terrified guests.

"Our Fellows."

A young Canadian who has been in this country just five years, was lately naturalized and made an American citizen in all that the term implies. He was jubilant, of course, and he invited a couple of friends to drink to his health. There hangs on the wall of the drinking place that crayon of scenes in Andersonville prison, with which almost everybody is familiar. The new citizen studied it carefully, and after reading some of the statistics which are printed on the side of the picture, turned to his friends and said: "How did it come that those Southerners got so many of our fellows down there?" "Our fellows!" said an old soldier, who was standing near by, "and he's been an American citizen for about fifteen minutes!"

A Submarine Bridge.

Did you ever hear tell of such a marvel of the engineer's work, or stop to figure out the conditions that would make such an architectural monstrosity necessary? The Oresund is a narrow strait between Denmark and Sweden, which is constantly filled with all kinds of shipping. There is a ferry, but it is always being impeded in its operations by the sea vessels. To obviate this Rudolph Lilljequist, the Swedish engineer, proposes the submarine bridge—a structure half tunnel and half bridge. The whole affair will be a gigantic tube, resting on piles sunk out of reach of the bottom of the largest vessels, the diameter sufficient for two railway tracks and one driveway. It will be five miles long, and will probably be finished by 1895.

An Important One.

A New York clergyman, who was preaching in a neighboring village, astonished the congregation by saying: "I wish to return to New York by the first train, as I have a wife and five children there, and have never seen one of them." This declaration excited the most painful curiosity among the good people, which was allayed, however, when it became known that the "one" which the clergyman had never seen was one that had been born since he left home the day before.

Higher Pay Than the Judges.

It seems hardly credible that a designer of ladies' dresses should be receiving a bigger income than one of her majesty's judges. It is stated, however, on good authority, that a fashionable dress designer in the west end of London makes, on an average, between £20,000 and $30,000 a year.
