Hundreds of pedestrians and ele-vated and surface car passengers, truck drivers and residents of Baltimore witnessed a novel sight the other morning. About 9 o'clock a dense swarm of bees silently and suddenly swept down on that region, and for nearly three hours made the crosswalks impassable. Throngs of people gathered in groups in the adjoining corners, and drivers of vehicles of every description from time to time made traffic impossible. A humorous side of the occurrence was when an open car passed. It was compelled to drive through the thickest portion of the swarm. The sudden head-ducking, the speedy covering of faces, accompanied by the smothered ejaculations of women and the less elegant expletives of the men, added to the fractious antics of the car horses and the frantic efforts of the driver to beat off the bees convulsed the people on the sidewalk. At 1 o'clock three elevated road employes swooped down on the bees. After half an hour of fruitless efforts to dislodge them they gave up the fight in disgust. Scores of suggestions, witty, wise or worthless, came from all sides. Finally Frank Eddy, who was one of the passengers on the elevated road, who had been stung, hit upon a plan which, after patient effort, re-sulted in the capture of several thousand bees. An empty nail-keg, with one of the chines knocked out, was smeared with molasses and suspended from a guard rail of the elevated road, and dropped directly in the midst of the whirling mass. The scheme was successful. Mr. Eddy is proud of his hunt. He estimates the bees numerically at 5,000, and the value of the captives at close to $50.

"A few years ago," said Charles J. Patterson of Philadelphia, "I learned the secret of the life of a man who had passed more than a quarter of a century with scarcely a smile. He had been a physician and surgeon and on one occasion had to remove an injured eye in order to save the other eye and prevent total blindness. The ght before the operation he had been drinking heavily with some friends, and, although the following morning he was sober, hand was unsteady and nerves were unstrung. After administering chloroform he made a fatal and horrible blunder, removing the well eye by mistake and thus consigning his patient to perpetual blindness. The moment he discovered his error he turned the man over to a competent surgeon, deeded everything he possessed to him and hurried from the neighborhood like a convioted thief. The remainder of his life was one constant round of remorse, and he rapidly developed into a confirmed misanthrope. The secret of his life was known to a number of people, but when it was finally revealed to me it explained a mystery and made me respect the man, for however grave was his original blunder, which in some respects was, of course, worse than a crime, his rentance was of the most genuine character."

INDIANS' BELIEF IN MAGIC. American Indians View the Mysterious Much as the Asiatles Do.

Very reluctantly do civilized Indians give up their ideas of magic. The idea of worshiping growing obots is quite a settled one among the tribes, and some of the stories which connect corn and flowers with beneficent deities are very pleasing and attractive. Animals, too, are spoken of in a very singular and superstitious manner, and the different sizes of besats which are hunted is accounted for in a story of the creation which is even more realistic and practical than the one told in the first chapter of Genesis. This story, which is frequently repeated with variations, is that at the time of the creation all the beasts of the field and forests clamored for priority in size. Each was vainglorious and dictatorial, and e after another was being humbled by being made smaller than a hated enemy, the idea being that every-thing human and otherwise that was born had a prior existence, and came into the world with the benefit of exnce thus derived. The doctrine of the transmigration of souls is so neral among Indians of various tribes that there was nothing at all enliar about this, and it is very obable that some of the early riters on this subject got their ideas from exceptionally intelligent exponents of Indian Buddhism or something very similar to it.

In a Tree.

A maple tree 100 years old, which tands on the left bank of the river Oder, in Germany, has been curiously converted into a circular two-storied ouse. A flight of steps leads up to the first story, where the branches have been woven together and form a firm leafy floor. Above this floor is another, formed in the same way; and the ends of the branches have been woven into solid walls and cut so as to admit the light through eight win-

Size and Color of Human Hair. Actual measurements have shown that the size of a hair depends much upon its color and that such filaments the human head vary from the 250th to the 600th part of an inch, blonde hair being finest and red the coarsest. Dr. Zung, German specialist, says the average number of fairs on a blonde head is 140,000; on the red not more than 90,000.

MER MODEST WISHES.

If Nerve Counts, This Girl Ought to Be a Star.

A Chicago dramatic and theatrical agent received the following letter last week from one of the large array of stage struck girls:

"Dear Sir: I want to go on the stage very bad. I have been on the stage several times in home talent. I can sing a good many comical songs. I am a graceful waltzer, and also a pretty good roller skater. I have short, died, blond, curly hair that looks exactly like a wig, but I would wear a wig if necessary. I will not wear tights: I would rather never go on the stage than to do such a brazen thing as that. I would not even wear short dresses like they wear when they play pheasant parts. I don't know what salary I ought to command to start with. I hear that Fay Templeton gets $1,000 a week. I would be willing to accept a salary of $150 a week to start. I would want to be a star. I would not play any ugly parts. Will I have to bring a pet dog or parrot? Please answer all these questions and send for me as soon as ou can get me the job. I don't think I can get ready much under a week or ten days. Will I have to smoke cigarettes? I am willing to pay you for all your trouble. If I have to take a stage name I think I'll take Fay Floringe Dulcerine. Yours truly and hopefully, "SALLY JONES."

THE MOTOR MAN'S RIGHT BOOT It Is a Blessing to the Cobbler Because

It Needs Such Repairs.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," quoth the shoemaker as he tacked a sole on the motor man's right boot.

"Why so?" asked his nonagenarian visitor, who established his loafing headquarters in the shoemaker's shop.

"Well," said the repairer of heels and soles, "the electric cars have made business for me, though they made the horse dealers wince, 'tis said. You see there is now a gong under the motor man's right foot and in order to strike it the motor man must hit an iron attachment with the sole of his right boot. As the constant dripping of water wears away the stone, so the constant hammering of the gong causes the sole of the motor man's right boot to wear out. I do about twice the amount of repairing business for car men that I did in the old horse railroad days. I repair two right soles for every left sole. In making a pair of boots for a motor man I put twice as good stock in his right boot as I do in his left, and still nine times in ten the right boot is the first to wear out."

"And the world is getting queerer every day," said the nonagenarian, and he lighted his T. D. to see the smoke curl and think of his boyhood

WAS NOT GREEK TO HIM. This Learned Conductor Was a College

Graduate. "It isn't commonly understood that there are graduates from college who are horse-car conductors in New York but I discovered one such," said a well known clergyman. "I was on a car not long ago, and on the upper end of the route only the conductor and I were on the car. He sat down, took out a book and began reading at the end of the book and turning the leaves from right to left. 'That must be Hebrew he's reading,' I said to myself. The conductor seemed mightily interested in the subject, and he nodded his head approvingly and occasionally chuckled when the author made a good point. Finally I went over to his side and said:

"Excuse me, but are you reading

"The conductor nodded. "'Are you a college graduate?' 1

asked. Another nod. " 'What college?'

"'85-Yale."

"Then he resumed his reading and I asked no more questions."

The Diner-Out's Mistake.

A gentleman who had been invited out by A happened to be acquainted with the next door neighbor of his host, B, and, on descending from his hackney-coach, saw a haunch of venison roasting at the latter's fire. As he has no expectation of such fare at A's, he coolly changes his destination, and is welcomed by B to "pot luck." This he believes to be a modest phrase for venison, till the banquet appears in the shape of some pacon and eggs. It turns out that B's kitchen range was larger than his neighbor's, and A had obtained permission to get his piece de resistance cooked there.

The term "my uncle's," as applied to a pawnbroker's shop, is said to be a pun on the Latin uncus, a hook. Pawnbrokers employed a hook to lift articles pawned before spouts were adopted. "Gone to the uncus," therefore is exactly tantamount to the more modern phrase, "up the spout." In French the concierge of a prison is called uncle because the prisoners are 'kept there in pawn" by government. In the seventeenth century a usurer was called "my uncle" in the Walloon provinces because of his near connection with spendthrifts, called in Latin nepotes, nephews.

How a Jap Girl Advertises.

A young lady wishes to marry; she is very beautiful, has a rosy countenance framed in dark hair, eyebrows in the form of the crescent moon and a small but gracious mouth. She is also very rich-rich enough to spend the day by the side of her beloved admiring flowers and to pass the night in singing to the stars of heaven. The man on whom her choice shall fall must be young, handsome and educated. He must also be willing to share the same grave.

HIS LAST OATH.

How Senator Harris Broke Himself of Swearing.

There is a curious connection between the lives of Isham Harris and Bishop Quintard of Memphis, whose performance at Kitty Cheatham's wedding brought him into prominence.

The bishop and Harris are about of an age, and although of different temperaments and of different professions their careers have intertwined more than once.

Quintard was a chaplain in the confederate army, having secured the place through Harris' appointment. and Harris to this day always refers to Quintard as the man who broke him of the habit of profanity.

It was during the review of the troops when Harris was governor, and with his usual irascibility he gave some of the delinquents a terrible dressing down as they went by, interlarding his comments with characteristic oaths.

Just then Quintard sprang forward. 'How can you expect to control these men, governor," he exclaimed, "when you cannot control your own temper?" Harris stopped in astonishment and gazed at the bold chaplain. Then he recognized the force of the man's words and stopped swearing.

He says he hasn't sworn from that time to this, and he really thinks he hasn't, but some people who are wont to listen to the peppery Tennesseean somehow or other gain a different impression.

ONE OF THE PROPRIETIES. A Little Cirl Who Did Not Want to Be at All Misunderstood.

A policeman, still in uniform, on his way home, stood a maruent at the corner of a couple of residence streets, and as he started on a very handsomely-dressed little girl came up and stopped while a carriage passed.

"How d'ye do, little girl?" said the officer in a fatherly tone; for he had some little girls of his own.

The little miss looked at him askance.

"Do you want to get across the street?" he said again, attributing her silence to the natural shyness of a child.

She merely looked at him and made no reply. "Come," he said, in his kindliest way, "I'm going across and I'll escort von over." This time she stepped back haugh-

"Excuse me," she replied, "I can take care of myself. My mamma told me it wasn't proper for a lady to be seen on the street with a gentleman she had not been introduced to," and she skipped across, leaving the officer leaning up against the lamp-post trying to get over the shock.

FEARED THE POORHOUSE. The Chicago Merchant Saw the Wolf Staring in at the Door.

The business man was looking like Napoleon on the island of St. Helena, when a friend came into his office. "Hello, what's the matter?" was the greeting.

"Oh, these hard times are wearing on me." "No danger of going to the poorhouse, is there?"

"I wouldn't like to swear to it." "Is it that bad?"

"Well, I'm short $25,000 this year as compared with last."

"You've lost that much?"

"That's the size of it." "What were your profits last year?"

"One hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

"And you've only got $125,000 to keep the wolf from the door with for the year. By Jove, old man, I'm sorry for you. I really didn't know there was such suffering; would you like to borrow a quarter for ninety days or such a matter?" and the poor, hard pressed business man groaned.

Cresar's Stile.

A famous antiquary, and enthusiast in the search for Roman antiquities, was traveling through England, when he heard that on a certain hill thera was a stile called "Cæsar's stile." "Just so," thought the antiquary to himself; "such a road, mentioned in Antoninus, passed near here, and the traditional name of this stile confirms me in the opinion that there was a Roman camp on this spot." While he was surveying the prospect a peasant came up, whom the antiquary addressed: "They call this Cæsar's stile, "Yes, sir," said the do they not?' man, "they call it after poor old Bob Cæsar, the carpenter. I helped him to make it when I was a boy.

Authors' Methods. The methods and tastes of professional authors in this matter are quite as is the character of their several contributions to literature. For instance: The novelists Charles Reade and Victor Hugo, preferred immense sheets of paper and the coarsest of pens, while, on the other hand, both William Black and R. D. Blackmore cover dainty sheets of paper with their almost microscopic chirography. Charlotte Bronte wrote in the minutest of characters in a diminutive notebook, and Douglas Jerrold jotted down his witty inspirations on narrow, ribbon-like strips of blue paper.

A Poet's Compliment.

The poet Rogers, when ninety years of age, was out driving with a woman. She inquired of him about another woman whom he could not recollect. He pulled the check-string and appealed to his servant. "Do I know Lady M——?" The reply was, "Yes, This was a painful moment to sir. both of them. Taking his companion by the hand, he said: "Never mind, my dear, I am not compelled to stop the carriage to ask if I know you."

Berliners will never cease talking of the manner in which Minister Phelps procured a handsome residence right in the heart of their capital and within gunshot of the Linden -not a small undertaking in a city where the private houses can be counted on the fingers of one hand and where everybody lives in flats.

The only suitable house, for which Mr. Phelps had offered an annual rental of 100,000 marks, was unavailable, owing to legal difficulties, and though the court, the foreign office and his friends of the diplomatic corps assisted in the search, no other dwelling fit for his purpose could be found. With the practical ideas of an American, and regardless of cost where the proper representation of his country was concerned, Mr. Phelps then decided to create the right kind of a house if he could not find it ready. He leased the upper part of a new house in Neue Wilhelm strasse, and at once commenced tearing down and rebuilding until a typical American home had been established, which on bility to light and air, became the talk of the town. The entire American colony was invited for the opening, and thereafter the minister's residence was never closed against any of his countrymen, rich or poor; indeed it became the Mecca of many a poor and struggling artist or student, and none left it without kindly advice and-where DERELICTS IN THE ATLANTIC. One Wreck That Has Been Floating Around for Nearly Three Years.

The report that the famous dereliet, the Fannie F. Wolston, has been sighted again, this time about 250 miles east of Norfolk, awakens fresh interest in the champion and record breaker among existing wanderers on the sea. This schooner of Bath, Me., was wrecked more than two years and eight months ago, and has ever since drifted in the Atlantic, making a total course of many thousands of miles. About two months ago she was sighted not very far apparently from her present position. dications are said to be that, as she is now on the eastern edge of the gulf stream, she may float with it up to the trans-Atlantic steamer line, and so be a still greater peril to naviga-

The history of that vessel alone would form a sufficient argument for carrying out promptly the proposed system of international police for the destruction of dangerous derelicts. It was shown by the commissioner of navigation in his last report that in a period of five years there had been 332 known derelicts on the Atlantic coast of North America, besides 625 wrecks whose tracks were not marked. On the pilot chart for one month alone forty-five derelicts still afloat were marked, of which more than half appeared to be in the path of the trans-Atlantic steamers. Of course many have a short career, as they speedily break up or sink, but the experience of the Wolston shows how persistent is the peril in some cases, for she is only one of a large number known to keep awash for years.

TOOK A MEAN ADVANTAGE. Engaged Man Insisted on Kissing His

Flancee in a Street Car. A young man and a young woman changed from a Belt line to a Fourteenth street car at the avenue, Washington, and sat in one of the seats in the first car. He was carrying an overcoat and a satchel and was evidently going away. She wore a shirt waist and dark skirt, as if starting out on a shopping expedition. Just before they reached Sixth street he leaned over her and said quietly, so quietly that only the reporter back of them could hear: "I am going to kiss you good-by when I leave the car.

"Oh, please don't," she said appealingly; "not before all these people." But he was decided and said persistently: "Yes I shall; so raise your veil. If you try to resist people will see it and wonder about you, and they will look at you all the way uptown after I get off."

She glanced up shyly and then slowly raised her eveil. He bent over her and kissed her and no one in the car looked up. A few people wondered why she was so anxious to show the diamond ring on the left hand, but n body but the reporter appreciated the fact that she was trying to justify the kissing by means of an envagement ring.
