A PATRIOTIC PIGEON.

How After Four Years' Captivity in a Foreign Land It Flew Home.

Many instances are on record of tenacity of memory on the part of carrier pigeons, who are said never to forget their first cote. None of these instances are more remarkable, probably, than that recorded of one of the birds employed to carry messages into Paris during the siege. These birds, domiciled in Paris, were taken out by balloons, and after being laden with tidings from without were liberated and made their way back to their homes.

One day a pigeon from one of these balloons was captured by a German soldier of the besieging army. He gave it to his officer who presented it in turn to his commander, Prince Frederick Charles. The prince sent it as a gift to his mother in Germany, who happened to be somewhat of a pigeon fancier.

"The princess, delighted with the gift, placed the captive in a great dove cote, where it was surrounded with every luxury that the most exacting bird could ask for, but whence it could not escape.

Here the French pigeon lived, apparently happy enough, for four long years. But it did not forget its fatherland.

One day a door of the great dove cote was left carelessly open. The French pigeon flew out. It was never seen again by its German hosts, but ten days later it was beating its wings against the doors of its old cote in the Boulevard de Clichy, Paris. It was recognized by its old keeper, and received the welcome due to a patriot returned from a long captivity.

INFLUENCE OF FEAR.

An Important Factor in the Hastening of Death.

"Of the whole number of persons supposed to die of disease," said a prominent physician the other day, "I should say that at least fifty per cent are really carried away by fear. Were it not for this element mortality would be far less than it is."

In support of this statement he cited various cases where the element of fear had entered largely in as a potent factor to persuade people that their time had come. Presentiments, prophecies, premonitions, and general nervousness all played their part. On the other hand, a short time ago a patient of a city hospital was frightened into getting well. This man was brought in an ambulance, supposedly dying from heart failure.

He was laid on the table and a diagnosis showed him to be suffering from hysteria. The surgeon turned to one of his assistants and, asking for a knife, remarked that he would cut down to the heart and find out what the trouble was. The patient gave a yell, and leaping from the table started for the door. Remonstrance was in vain. That man was cured and never came back.

Some years ago four criminals, condemned in Russia to die, were taken to a house and shown several beds, in which they were told a number of cholera patients had died. As a matter of fact, the beds were new, never having been slept in. The criminals were informed that they would be set at liberty if they would undergo the ordeal of sleeping several nights in the beds. From the prisoners' point of view it was a possible, though desperate, chance of escape. They, one and all, decided to take the chances. At the end of the time prescribed two were uninjured and went free, but the others developed all the symptoms and died of Asiatic cholera.

FIDELITY OF A NEGRO.

The Old Man Was Ever Faithful to "Mars Tom" of His Youth.

"I saw a pathetic instance at Greensboro of a negro's fidelity," said W. L. Williams, a traveling man. "About ten miles from the town I saw a grave with a marked slab at the head. Seated near it was an old negro with a bunch of flowers, which he was placing on the mound. I stopped my horse and spoke to the darkey.

"Whose grave is that, uncle?" I asked.

"Mars Tom's, boss. I'm his nigger."

"Oh, no; you are no man's nigger now. Didn't you ever know you were free?"

"Dunno nuffin 'bout dat, sah. I see Mars Tom's nigger, sah, an' he's waitin' foh me suah up dah. Dese han's done tote him from dat place dey call Shiloh, an' he died while I wiah a-totin' 'im; jest closed he eyes an' went to sleep, an' when I comes ter cross de ribber ob Johdan he jest hol' out his han's an' tells de angel at de gate who I be an' he let me in. I dreamed 'bout it las' night, boss."

"I was interested in the old fellow and wanted to hear his story. The slab at the grave told me it was that of 'Col. Tom Winn, killed at the battle of Shiloh," and I questioned the faithful negro further:

"Were you with him when he was killed?"

"I was right dar, boss. Done pick 'm up an' tote 'm to dat place dey call Corinth, den I foun' a train, got to de place dey call Chattanooga; de nex' day we wiah in Atlanta. Mars Tom den in glory. Dis heah nigger left to ten 'is body. Dey buried 'im when I got 'im heah, an' dis nigger jest left to ten 'is grave an' keep de flowers hyah."

"I found upon inquiry that the story was true, and for a quarter of a century the faithful negro has done nothing but attend the grave of his young master, whose body he brought from Northern Mississippi to Central Georgia."

ADELAIDE AND THE DUDES.

A Youthful Miss Teaches a Lesson to Would-Be Mashers.

Adelaide was to make a little railroad trip by herself, and as she was still in her teens and had never been away from home alone, her parents felt some natural anxiety as to her ability to take care of herself. An old friend happened along at the station, however, and as he was going the same route he was privately instructed to please keep an eye on Adelaide, but without allowing that high-spirited maiden to know of his surveillance. Not far out he observed that two glittering dudes had singled out pretty Adelaide as a fit target for special attention. They sat just behind her and angled in every possible manner to gain her favorable notice; but dainty Adelaide held her head high and her slender nose at a scornful tilt.

Finally one of the dudes leaned forward and deposited two visiting cards on the window ledge at the girl's elbow. Her eyes did not even deign to rest on them. Presently at the call of a way station the chappies left the train and stood on the platform casting languishing glances in at Adelaide. Then she aroused from her statuesque repose, opened the window and with a scientific effort of her haughty finger tips flipped the cards in the faces of the astonished dudes.

BOTH "AT HOME."

A Scotch Professor Quaintly Answers a Society Invitation.

A story has been current among the students in Aberdeen which showed that, up to a comparatively recent date, ancient prejudices were retained by the old Scotch professors. It related to the late Principal Pirie, who had a weakness for the refinements of life.

Just after "at home" cards became fashionable one of the drest specimens of the old professional regime was surprised to receive a missive, which read as follows:

"Principal and Mrs. Pirie present their compliments to Professor T— and hope he is well. Principal and Mrs. Pirie will be 'at home' on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock."

This was something which evidently required an answer, but the recipient of it was quite equal to the occasion. He wrote:

"Professor T— returns the compliments of Principal and Mrs. Pirie, and informs them that he is very well. Professor T— is glad to hear that Principal and Mrs. Pirie will be at home on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Professor T— will also be at home."

Egg-Shell.

The employment of egg-shells for ornamental purposes is extremely ancient. A manuscript in the Harleian collection represents a number of egg shells ornamented in the most elegant and costly manner. Miniaturists were often painted upon egg-shells with extreme care, and shells thus curiously decorated became valuable and highly-esteemed presents. In Venice young noblemen frequently lavished large sums of money upon portraits painted within egg shells intended as presents.

A Blood-sucking Earthworm.

South Africa is the home of a species of earthworm, a creature closely related to our common angleworm, who is not only a giant among the denizens of the soil, but which is reputed to have a taste for human blood. There are two species of this uncanny wiggler, one of a dark red color and the other almost black. They are larger than one's finger and from three to four feet in length.

The Largest Barrel.

The celebrated "Heidelberg tun" looks like a small cask when compared with a huge barrel that was made last summer for the use of the "Halle aux Vins," a Paris establishment, known as the largest liquor emporium in the world. This huge French barrel has a capacity of 18,710 gallons and measures twenty-three

WHITE HOUSE TOO SMALL.

Presidential Mansion Ridiculously Inadequate to the Demands of To-day.

Mrs. Harrison felt not only the inconvenience to herself during her residence at the White house, but was impressed with the disgrace to the nation of so poor a house for its chief executive. The matter occupied much of her time and thought, and the plan as developed by her seems to possess many points of advantage over every other that has been suggested. Mrs. Harrison's idea was to build wings on either side of the present structure of equal size and similar design. These wings were to be at right angles with the old house and parallel with each other, connected on the south side by a conservatory, the four walls inclosing a large interior court. The chief and really only objection to this plan is that it might alter present lines of the White house, or by increasing its size detract from its beauty. These objections seem to have been noted and overcome by the architect who sketched the plans under Mrs. Harrison's instructions. The wings, classic in design as the original building, are connected with it by a graceful colonnade of Ionic pillars, and enhance rather than diminish its architectural value. The interior arrangements are excellent, and could not be improved upon. The present building is retained as the president's residence. The west wing is devoted to official needs and the east wing is planned for a national gallery of art. The details have been carefully thought out and show a woman's fine judgment. Various other plans have been suggested, but none as original and comprehensive as the one originated by Mrs. Harrison.

Count de Lesseps.

The late Count de Lesseps never seemed to lose sight of the education of his children, even in the smallest detail. One morning at breakfast, a beautiful Dresden tea-cup was broken. "Ah!" cried the countess, "a disaster! Two more of that set will now be broken. It always happens so." "Are you so superstitious," asked the count, "as really to believe that two more will be broken?" "I know it." "Then let us get it off our minds." And, taking two of the cups by the handles, he dashed them together. The anger and dismay of the countess proved conclusively that she had not seriously held to her superstition. It also loosened any hold the absurd idea may have had on the minds of the children.

An Informal Coaxion.

A fastidious person once officiated in a region where a kiss to the bride was considered an indispensable part of the wedding ritual; but the looks of one newly made bride pleased him so little that he observed: "At this point in the ceremony it is customary for the clergyman to kiss the bride, but in the present case we will omit that formality." The justly indignant bridegroom waited for his revenge, which he got a few minutes later with: "At this point of the ceremony it is customary to hand a sealed envelope to the clergyman, but in the present case we will omit that formality."

Not Enough and Too Much.

The following exchange of telegrams between a Washington correspondent and his home office shows what one managing editor thinks of congress. The managing editor led off and the correspondent followed in this wise: "We will have lots of space to-morrow. What can you send to fill up?" "How would an account of what congress is going to do suit you?" "Not enough. That story can be put in a paragraph." "Well, how about an account of what congress is not going to do?" "We won't have space enough for that."

No One Knows Why It Is So.

Curiously enough the right hand, which is more sensitive to touch than the left, is less sensitive to temperature. If the two hands be dipped in two basins of water at the same temperature, the left hand will feel the greater sensation of warmth; nay, it will do this even when the thermometers show that the water in the left basin is really somewhat colder than in the right basin. With left-handed persons the reverse would be found.

A Story-Writer's Revenge.

One successful story-writer of this country is having his revenge on those that rejected his earlier stories. He carefully treasured his rejected manuscripts, and, after his first success, began to unload them upon the market. They go now without urging, and at prices he did not demand originally.

O. W. O. Hardman, Sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds."

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner, with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. For sale by P. C.
