

HE school house over which Miss Mattle Smith had reigned for quite a number of years hill just beyond the diminutive village of Wales. It was upon the outskirts of a wood and said to be in a snaky place. Miss Mattle, however, had nevseen any snakes and didn't believe there were any. She had no objections whatever to the situation, but the house itself was old. Whenever Miss Mattie met a school trustee she was bound to tell him right decidedly that she must have a new school house, one with a cellar for the coal and room for her desk away from the draught.

But in the spring time the draught from the door was very welcome, and Miss Mattie was grateful for all the air she could get as she sat at her desk, hearing the spelling lesson

"Hero, hero," drawled Miss Mattle's pet, Nan Foster. Then Nan came to a pause and fiddled nervously with the ckets of her apron.

"Well," queried the teacher.
"I know what it means," declared the little girl; "I know so well that I didn't have to look in the dictionary, but I can't say it to save my life." "It means a boy," volunteered a very small girl, glancing dreamily out of the chool room window.

"Oh, yes, of course, I know it means a boy," said Nan, hastily, "a boy whooh, dear, I can't say it."

Miss Mattle put a sudden end to the difficulty by furnishing the dictionary ning, whereupon the pupil at the ot of the class murmured grumblingly that that was just what he would have said if he had been given his turn.

After the spelling class had retired the arithmetic class came and estabed itself in a very long row before Miss Mattle. Down at the end of the arithmetic class was a little Dutch boy with blue eyes and flaxen hair. He was a very new scholar, and he didn't look would remain foot all the time.

The blue eyes were fastened earnest ly upon Miss Mattie's face as she put estion: "If an apple is divided into two parts, what are the parts called, Johnny Smeltzer?" Halves," answered the little Dutch two parts what are the parts called?" inquired Miss Mattle, determined to scover what prodigious amount of ar-hmetic this small boy knew. "Snits," answered the little Dutch without a moment's hesitation.

All morning the school children had sen calling Johnny Smeitzer "Tow lead," but when the next recess ar rived he was christened "Snits."

"Snits must be terrible poor," whis-pered Jessie Brown, "to have pants give to him."

"He ith pore," returned Ben Windsor, "hith moths ith our wathwoman."

"I know one thing," remarked the teacher's pet, throwing her proud little head in the air, "If I was Snits I wouldn't come to school if I had to wear people's old pants. His mother ought to go to the store and buy him a pair with her wash money."

"I won't play with him while he wears Ben Windsor's pants," said Charey Stills, virtuously. "Neither will I," cried George Watts.

"Neither will I," echoed Sammy Lin-

The appearance of Ben Windsor's little sister, hand in hand with a smiling nurse maid, put an end to the uncharitable conversation. Fanny Windsor had cried to come up to the school house, and as she hadn't been very well lately, she was not allowed to cry in vain. Ben was ordered to take good care of his little sister, and the nurse departed, leaving her charge in the midst of an admiring group. Fanny Windsor was fat and dimpled, and did not show any signs of her recent illness except in a certain imperiousness of manner that was extremely amusing.

All the early part of that afternoon in the school room the visitor behaved perfectly. She was only three years old, but she repeated her letters with her eyes off the primer, and she counted up to twenty with creditable rapidity. It was during the fifteen minutes' recess that she grew determined and venturesome. She insisted upon seesawing with one of the large boys, she slapped three of the girls, and in the end was seen marching off alone, crying vehemently that she dared anybody to come with her. When the bell rang Fanny Windsor had disappeared.

If there had been a cellar to the little old school house there would have been a probability, at least, that the trustee's small daughter had wandered into it, or fallen into it, for very likely the cellar would have had no steps.

Miss Mattie and all the pupils, even the three girls who had been slapped, were in a great flutter looking for the missing child. Ben said that she couldn't have gone home, because she was afraid to cross the stream.

It was a faint, far away sounding cry that told them, cellar or no cellar, Fan ny Windsor was under the school house She had crept through a small opening, which, by all means, should have led into the cellar. It was such a very small opening that only a very small oy, who no longer lived in the village. had ever investigated the region from which sounded the forlorn cry. The small boy had seen wonderful things under the school house, lighted very well, he declared, by sunshine shooting through the chinks. He had seen four snakes and a nest of spiders as big as butterflies, and a whole lot of bats. Ben Windsor's little sister must have been seeing the wonders, too, for she began to scream loudly.

"Can't anybody get her out?" cried Miss Mattie, wringing her hands. Ben put his scared face to the opening and called, "Fanny, Fanny!"

"We'll have to tear up the school louse floor to get her," exclaimed Willie Day, excitedly. 'She'll be smothered by that time," said Sammy Linger. "Fanny, come along this way," pleaded Ben. "Here'th brotha."

"I reckon she's caught," said George Watts.

Then Ben screamed, "I thee a wat!" Many and many a time the school children had laughed at Ben for calling a rat a "wat," but none of them laughed

In all that anxious crowd only one mortal realized that something must be done. The little Dutch boy picked up a stick and the next instant Ben Windsor's trousers went wriggling through the opening.

"Oh, dear," cried Miss Mattie, wringing her hands harder than ever, and Miss Mattie's pet hid her face and wept aloud. There was a terrible scuffle under the old school house. It seemed to last a long time; then there was a strange quiet. Ben Windsor, pale and trembling, had drawn back from the "Mebbe they's both dead," said Sammy Linger, huskily. At a safe distance from the opening a boy was stooping, with his hands upon his knees, "Some'n's a-coming," he announced in a fearful whisper.

The something that first showed ur at the opening was a round, dimpled tear-stained face, and Ben Windson aught his little sister in his arms and desed her wildly. Following after Fanny came Snits. Watching Snits drawing himself through the hole, one understood how very small the hole was. The little Dutch boy's fair face was whiter than usual, almost as white as his hair, and his blue eyes looked quite dark as he got upon his feet and stood bashfully, whirling by the tail that third something, which, had it appeared first, would have caused a scatteration in the crowd. "It skeered her but it hadn't hurt her yet," he an-nounced, soberly. The third something was a dead rat. Then Miss Mattie's pet, who had unveiled her eyes cast an eloquent glance into the teacher's face. "Snits is a hero, ain't he, Miss Mattle," she asked?

Miss Mattie nodded her head. "And I reckon he's paid for them pants a hundred times over!" cried Willie Day, enthusiastically, and again liss Mattle nodded her head.

Later on it was declared that Snits puilt the new school house, for if Ben Windsor's father hadn't seen the dead rat with his own eyes, he might never have roared out threateningly: old rat hole shan't stand another summer; we'll get a new school house, or we'll have none!"—Louise R. Baker, in ng and the New York Observer.

SAVED BY A LARIAT.

Qualities of the Lasso as a Life Pre-

The writer had corralled a western man in a hotel lobby and was holding him up for all there was in it, which was a good deal, considering that the man hadn't been east for ten years or more, and had never fallen into the clutches of the journalist in quest of an item of interest.

"You were asking meawhile ago about the lariat and its uses," he said, "and it reminds me of a time on one occasion when it served an excellent purpose as a life preserver."

"It isn't always used for that, is it?" queried the writer.

"Well, no," laughed the westerner, 'I've seen it do prompt service when there was no other rope handy and the hoss thief was. But this time was different," he went on. "I know because was the one preserved. We were up in the canyon country looking for some cattle, and one of the boys and I had gone off the trial to a stream to take bath, as you might call it in the east, for it was hotter than blazes and shade was not plentiful. We went into the water some distance above a turbulent rapid and a waterfall of twenty-five or thirty feet, and as we didn't go to swim so much as to get cool, all we needed was enough water to cover us. and that's all my companion took.

"I was, however, more ambitious, and having been a fine swimmer when I was in the east, I thought I would branch out a bit. I was soon branching out extensively, and the first thing I knew the swift water caught me and down I went to the fall. I tried to pull for the shore, but it was no good, and then I set up a yell that made the canyon echo, and my partner came after me along the shore. I was fifty feet out in the stream, struggling, and there wasn't any more sign of salvation for me than if I had been in mid-

"Down I kept going, whirled and turned upside down and fired around promiscuously, until, about a hundred yards above the final fall, I caught on a rock. It was just high enough to keep my head out of water, and I hung to it till my finger nails seemed to be imbedded in it. My partner at this juncture showed what kind of a fellow ie was in an emergency, for he appeared on shore with our two lariats tied together, and just as I was about to let go and be smashed on the rocks below, he swung that lariat as cool as he ever did from the back of his mustang and it dropped square over my head. The rest of it I am not very conscious of, because by the time he had pulled me ashore by the neck I was about as near hung as I ever want to be, but he brought me around all right in the course of half an hour or so, and I was quite as good as new again."

"That was a narrow escape," marked the writer.

"And that was an odd fellow who saved me," added the westerner, "for he was so mad about the scare I had given him that I'll be blamed if he didn't turn to before the day was over and give me the worst licking I ever got in my life for scaring him so." -Washington Star.

This famous play, which dates back so far that some people have a vague idea that it caused the war of the rebellion, has been presented with religious regularity each dramatic season, sometimes with double little Evas and double Uncle Toms even, but never has it been given with such an elaborate stage dressing and realistic effects as this. In fact several of the features are in themselves sufficiently novel to make it worth while going to see "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for the forty-seventh time. The company is strong. Miss Cook's Topsy is a fine piece of character and dialect acting with the additional virtue that is really funny. It is doubtful if the part was ever given better or even as well played by anyone else. Herbert Cook assumes the roll of Uncle Tom very acceptably, even if it isn't Shakesperean. But the leading feature of the production is the gorgeous transformation scence painted by Sosman & Landis, which represents "little Eva in the Golden realms." The tableau is a beautiful and striking one, representing the flight of the angel of death and the opening of the golden gates. There are also several other noteworthy stage settings, representing a cotton picking scence, Eliza crossing the ice, etc. Some very pleasing singing of plantation melodies is given by a colored quartette, and there is some wing dancing that is a great novelty. The audience last night was a large one.—The Times, April 14.
