A TRUE GHOST STORY.

experience: "Ah! it is very odd that these ghost stories should always be related at second or third hand. Now, I want to see a person who personally has seen the ghost, and then I will believe!"

Yes. People are more accustomed to saring about ghosts now; and yet, even now, should it be a wife, daughter, or sister who ventures to narrate some supernatural experience, she is pooh-poohed or laughed at or told to "take a pill."

Now, I have seen a ghost, and am pre pared to attest most solemnly to the fact, as well as to the truth of every word here set down. I have, of course, avoided names, but nothing else; so, without further preamble, I will state my case

Some years ago 1 became the object of the infatuated adoration of a person of my own age and sex, and I use the word "infatuated" advisedly, because I feel now, as I did at the time, that neither I nor any mortal that ever lived could possibly be worthy of the over-whelming affection which my poor friend lavished upon me. I on my side was not ungrateful to her, for I loved her in return very dearly, but when I explain that I was a wife and the mother of young children, and that she was unmarried, it will easily be understood that our devotion to each other must of necessity be rather onesided, and this fact caused some disquietude between us at times.

For many years my friend held a post ch she resigned soon after court. w she began to know me; and although her royal mistress in her gracious kindness assigned two houses to her, she gave them both up to be free to live near me in B---; indeed, she gave up relatives, old servants and comforts in order that she might come and lie (and die, alas)) in lodgings over a shop near But she was not happy. She med" over the inevitable fact that sequence of the difference in her astances and mine. I could not be circumstances and mine, I could not be with her every day and all day long. I think she was maprally of an unhap-py disposition, being deeply, passion-stely and unjustifiably jealous, and also painfully incapable of taking things and people as they were. All this gave me often much annoyance; but we were, all the same, sometimes very cheerful and happy together, and some-times the reverse times the reverse

Later on, she, poor soul, was taken ill, and during months of fluctuating sealth I nursed her-sometimes in the sometimes without-and at moments during her illness she found strange comfort in foreteiling to me, after the most "uncanny" fashion things which she declared would hap en to me after her death. They were atly trivialities-little episodes converning people and things over whom we had talked and laughed together, an althout with

I had been sitting by her absence. bedside all the afternoon, and all that evening I had held her dear hand and had kept whispering comforting words in her ear; but latterly she had made no response and was seemingly unconscious Suddenly a message came from my house (not a hundred yards it was away) saying my husband wanted me at once, as one of my children was ill. I looked at the nurse, who assured me there was nothing immediate impending, so, stooping over my poor friend, I whispered-at the same time pressing a kiss on her forehead-that half an hour should see me at her side again. But she took no notice, and much against my will I hastily and noiselessly left the room.

Throwing a shawl over my head. hurried across the square, and , as passed the church the clock struck 12, and I suddenly remembered that to-day was my birthday!

I got back in less than half an hour and on my return heard, to my everlasting sorrow, that I had not been gone ten minutes before my dear Lecame restless and uneasy, then looked hastily round the room, gave a cry, then there came a rush of blood to her mouth, and after a few painful struggles she sank back, gasped once or twice and never moved again.

Of course I thought then, and do to this day, that she was looking round the room for me and that she had died feeling I had broken my faith with her. A bitter, never-failing regret! I have given this light sketch of the feelings which existed between me and my poor friend (before narrating the circumstances of her supernatural visit to me) just to emphasize the facts of the alluring fascination, the intense affection, which existed between us during her lifetime, and which, I firmly beleve, have lasted beyond her grave. Quite a year and a half after her death my poor L----, with what mo-tive I know not-unless it may have een, as I sometimes fondly hope, to assure me that she understood and sympathized with my sorrow at having failed her at the moment of her extremity-appeared to me. She came once, but never again. It occurred thus:

I had been suffering all day from brow ague and had gone early to bed, but not to sleep. All the evening I had been kept painfully awake by that same church clock which I have mentioned above.

It seemed to me to strike oftener. ouder and more slowly than any clock I had ever had the misfortune to come across. Of course my ailment of the moment caused the clock's vagaries to appear peculiarly painful, and I bore the annoyance very restlessly, with my face turned pettishly to the wall, but when the midnight hour began to chime I felt as though I could bear it no longer. Muttering an impatient exclamation, I turned in my bed so as to face the room, and looking across it I saw my poor L---- standing close to a screen between me and the door, looking at me.

She was in her usual dress, wearing what was then called a "cross-over," which was tied behind, while her boanet, which she was always in the habit of taking off as she came unstairs, was, as usual, hanging by the ribbon on her arm. She had a smile on her face, and

A WONDERFUL DOG.

Tennessee Canine Which Imitates the Cries of Numerous Animais. While on a trip through Moore county of this state recently I was the guest of the Rev. Frank M. Downing, who lives in the neighborhood of a small settlement called County Line, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. His family consists of himself and wife and a small yellow dog, which I noticed received an unusual amount of care and attention. As there was nothing particularly attractive about the dog, which was only mongrel cur, I rather wondered at their manifest affection, and one day inquired the reason of it. Mr. Downing, for answer, called "Bench" and placing him in a chair, commanded him to "crow." My astonishment was unbounded when the dog gave a perfect imita-tion of a Shanghai rooster, and without further command, followed it with the neigh of a horse, lowing of cows, grunts and squeals of pigs, meouwing of cats and various noises incident to farm life. He could give all the yelps of a pack of hounds in pursuit of a fox and in so realistic a manner that you could scarcely help believing that a hunt was in progress. Mr. Downing said nobody had taught the animal and his peculiar imitative powers were discovered by accident. The summer previous, when Bench was a mere puppy, the Rev. John Malcolm, the preacher for their circuit, was ill at Downing's house and was made extremely nervous at night by a rooster crowing at all hours beneath his window. The people who were attending could not discover the rooster, but one morning Mrs. Downing, in passing the window, was startled by seeing the puppy throw back his head and crow. She hastened to relate the circumstance to her husband, who was incredulous and carefully watched the dog. He quickly corroborated his wife's story and for some time the neighbors flocked to see the wonderful dog. He quickly learned to crow at command, and each day picked up some new sound. Last November a neighbor of Mr. Downing's carried Bench to Nashville, while the circus was there and the manager offered a handsome price for him, saying that he was convinced Bench could be taught to talk, but Mr.

Downing refused to give him up. In appearance Bench is not prepos-essing, his color being a dirty yellow, his hair coarse and wiry, his legs short and his body rather unwieldy. In his eyes, however, there gleams an intelligence almost human.

Buildings for Cold Storage.

A gentleman addressed the Western New York Hosticultural society in the interest of the construction of cold storage rooms for a neighborhood. This system, he thought would make the supply for the market throughout the year more equal to its demands. This cooperative principle may be worked as ccessfully in this section as in dairying. Speaking from personal experience, he said:

"I have a building that I built for the storage of nursery stock and in which I have had apples stored all winter. It is frost proof, built on heavy stone wall 24 inches thick, and 3 feet high. On this wall were set up 2x4 scantling; these were sheathed with scantling; these were sheathed with inch hemlock, then covered with tarred and I saw her so clearly that I was building paper, then furred out with able to note some of the particulars of I distinctly noticed her lovely little strips four inches deep and again covd as before, until the wall has three air spaces; the roof is constructed in the same way to protect against frost; light and ventilation come from two rows of windows at the top; the roof is gravel; the outside is covered with novelty siding; the building has double or two sets of doors at each end, and a driveway through the center; it is painted inside and out; it is 100 feet long by 40 feet wide; the whole cost was $1,400 and it would afford storage for 10,000 barrels; the atmosphere is the same inside as out only that the building is frost proof and can be run in the winter months with a variation of not over 12 degrees; there is no smell of a cellar whatever and stock always

Mark Twain Has an Experience Thought Transference.

A great many people are being converted to the claims of mental telegraphy. Mark Twain gives a number of curious experiences in Harper's Magazine which indicate telepathy. Among them is the following: "Several years ago I made a campaign on the platform with Mr. George W. Cable. In Montreal we were honored with a reception. It began at 2 in the afternoon in a long drawing room in the Windsor hotel. Mr. Cable and I stood at one end of the room and the ladies and gentlemen entered it at the other end, crossed it at that end, then came up the long left-hand side, shook hands with us, said a word or two, and passed on, in the usual way. My sight is of the telescopic sort, and I presently recognized a familiar face among the throng of strangers drifting in at the distant door, and I said to myself, with surprise and high gratification: "That is Mrs. R.; I had forgotten that she was a Canadian.' She had been a great friend

She answered, dreamily, "Oh! I don't new-but some old lady! You'll see!" white ears, which were always my admiration and which were only half covared by her soft brown hair.

She stood-a minute it seemed-look ing at me, then she glided toward me. and I; half apprehensive that she was about to throw herself on my bed, exclaimed, jumping up in a sitting posture:

"Dearest! what brings you here so late?"

With deep reverence be it spoken; but as soon as these words were out of my mouth I was irresistibly reminded of those spoken, holy writ tells us, by St. Peter at the awful moment of the transfiguration! Awed and dazed at the sight of the spiritual visitants, we are told he uttered words "not knowing what he said." These words of mine also seemed to leap to my lips, with but little meaning in them, if any. As soon, however, as my voice had ceased the apparition disappeared and I remained some moments motionless. I was not frightened, but I felt colder than I had felt in my life, and I have never felt so cold since, but the moisture seemed to pour off my body. I called no one to my assistance. All I realused was that God had permitted me to see her once more, and that perhaps he might send her to me again. But he has not done so, and probably now he never will.

I lay awake all the night afterward, coping for-and, I think, almost execting-her again, and after the day had dawned I fell asleep.

Before telling my story to anyone and dreading unspeakably all the doubting and sarcastic speeches which such a narrative would inevitably call forth I sent for my doctor, an old and trusted friend, and after making him talk rationally to me for some time I asked him whether I had ever betrayed any hysterical tendencies. He reassured me eartily on this point and then asked my reasons for such a question. I therefore opened my heart to him and he neither ridiculed nor disbelieved, but, on the contrary, told me another case of the same kind which had lately happened to a friend of his. but he strongly advised me to keep my own counsel at present, which I did for some time, and kindly added that he not only did not look upon me as a unatic, but simply as a woman for whom one corner of the curtain which guarded the unseen had been lifted. In conclusion, I repeat I am ready to wouch for the truth of every word here set down and also, should it be required, to give names-in private-to Largest Diamond.

It is said that the largest diamond in the world was found a short time ago in the mines of Bahia de Pernagus, Brazil. The gem is reported to weigh 3,100 carats, which is 2,129 carats heavier than the largest existing diamond.

"I said to myself: 'It is Mrs. R.; I shan't have any trouble.'

"There were perhaps ten ladies present, all seated. In the midst of them was Mrs. R., as I had expected. She was dressed exactly as she was when I had seen her in the afternoon. I went forward and shook hands with her and called her by name and said:

"'I knew you the moment you appeared at the reception this afternoon. "She looked surprised and said: "But I was not at the reception. I have just arrived from Quebec, and have not been in town an hour.'

"It was my turn to be surprised now. I said: 'I can't help it. I give yo" my word of honor that it is as I say. I saw you at the reception, and you were dressed precisely as you are now. When they told me a moment ago that I should find a friend in this room your image rose before me, dress and all, just as I had seen you at the reception." "Those are the facts. She was not at the reception at all, or anywhere near it; but I saw her there nevertheless, and most clearly and unmistakably. To that I could make oath. How is one to explain this? I was not thinking of her at the time; had not thought of her for years. But she had been thinking of me, no doubt. Did her thought flit through leagues of air to me and bring with it that clear and pleasant vision of herself? I think so. That was and remains my sole experience in the matter of apparitions-I mean apparitions that come when one is (ostensibly) awake. I could have been asleep for a moment; the apparition could have been the creature of a dream. Still that is nothing to the point. The feature of interest is the happening of the thing just at that time, instead of an earlier or later time, which is argument that its origin lay in thought-transference."
