

O." Eleanor Landsberg said, as she crushed the cluster of fresh American Beauty roses she hands with painful intensity, as if they were somewhat to blame, "I cannot marry you, Morris-you are not my hero.

'Heroes do not exist out of novels,' answered Morris Holmes with that perfect inflection that good breeding gives to its possessor; "I cannot fight for my lady love as the mediaeval knights did, nor fly to the wars, in these degenerate

She was very handsome, very attractive in her strong young womanhood, and as a reformer, the fad of the hour.

What would you have me do to prove myself a hero?" asked Morris Holmes with a gently patronizing air, as if he had been speaking to a child, and which infuriated Eleanor.

"Do?" she repeated with withering corn, "do anything to show the world that you are a man, and at least capable of managing your own affairs. Life is full of instructions, but you have never learned one of its lessons. You have not even been a profitable dreamer."

She was intense and angry, and at last

You have taught me one lesson, anor, that I shall not forget. I hope when you find your hero he will love you as truly as I have done—as I will continue to do, if you do not forbid me. And now, good by. We part friends,

Before she answered him Eleanor rose, and in so doing dropped the flowers she had been holding. Morris sprang to pick them up, when instantly she placed her small, imperative foot upon them, crushing them to the floor. He looked at her shocked and wounded. "You see how hopeless it is that you ild ever understand me," she said and wound me by your indifference to vital questions, but you are sorry for the roses! Good by, Morris!"

"No berths left in the sleeper, sir."
"But I tell you I must have a berth—can't sit up all night." and Morri shivered at the thought of such

Morris Holmes had donned the plain dress of the ordinary business man and wore a hideous gray ulster that concealed his elegant personality, and was on his way to the mining district, where mine was located of which he was art owner; not a gold mine, but one at brought in gold—a bituminous al mine, known as the "Little Sum-

At the next stopping place he went it to catch a breath of fresh air, and bught a heg of cakes for the baby, an generosity that the tired mother lated with a smile.

He talked with the father and He talked with the father and learned their story. Two children left behind with relatives because they were too poor to take them along, but they had the promise of work where they were going, and then they would sand for them. paid, sodden men, scrubby boys and half blind mules. The foreman was brutalized by a long course of low wages, heavy expenses and sordid surroundings. It was a word and a blow with him, or an oath more demoralizing than blows. When a stranger appeared he was received with sullen and suspicious silence, being more than half suspected of wanting the bread out some other mouth. Morris was shocked almost out of recognition of himself by this unexpected state of things, for he felt himself passively to blame. He could not lay the odium on the shoulders of his agent, for he had never asked a single question concerning the mine, or the moral or physical welfare of the men. He had taken the revenue from it as part of his patrimony, indifferent as to methods. He had been helping to grind women and children into the dust, that he might loll in luxury. His conscience stung him with reproaches which were inadequate to make him suffer as he deserved. "Your hand, friend," he had said to the foreman, and noted the ugly scowl, and determined air of refusal with which the man drew back.

"Taint as white as yours; and how do I know that you are my friend," was the surly reply.

"I am here to see what you need, and will help you if you will let me," answered Morris gently.

"A spy of an overseer, like enough. The sooner you get out of these quarters the better for your health. If one of the bloomin' mine owners sent you here, go back an' tell him 'taint safe to come spyin' roun'. Tell him, too, that we'll give him a warmer welcomehounds that they all are!"

The miners, dirty, black, and complaining, had gathered around other foreman, and although they hated him, they were bound to him by a common "Go gack to your master, and tell him what his lovin' workmen says," said the foreman contemptuously, "an' get a photygraff of some of the hungry children and dyin' mothers, for the family album. My missus will give you hers."

"Men," said the stranger, unbuttoning his heavy ulster, and throwing it open, "have you ever heard of Morris Holmes?"

A groan and a series of yells saluted

"Aye, an' of his father afore him. It's that he might lie soft and eat fine food, that we gets lost in the choke an' damp. If he sent you, go back and tell him to come out here himself. We hev a long account to settle, an' the figgers is waitin'." It was "Old Geordie" who Eleanor Landsberg had no word from Morris for six months. Then she reved a naner marked in red ink, which had a paragraph that interested her. It gave a plain statement of the great provement that had taken place in the "Little Summit" mine, and went on to describe the comfortable homes of miners, the new machinery which had been put into the mines to take the place of child labor, the comfortable stables above ground that had been built for the mules, the improved social condition of the men's families, and nded with a glowing tribute to the 'noble energy of the young and ath-etic mine owner, Morris Holmes."

In a few months she received a second lewspaper, published like the first, in dioining the mines, and giving he news of that section of the country. It also contained a marked paragraph, but the marking was irregular black ines, of jagged pencil, and on the borer was drawn a rude hand, pointing to the notice, and the badly written but egible name, "Old Geordie."

eanor read in a few intense words the news that had been sent to her. There had been an accident in the nine. The roof of an entire chamber had fallen and buried twenty miners beneath it. The men were rescued with great difficulty, and some of them badly injured. When all were suped to have been saved, there was a railing cry, and the wife of "Old Geordie" struggled from the hands of friends and tried to throw herself into the mine. Morris Holmes, pale and out of breath, called for men to go down with sponded. The men cwed their lives to ger of a falling roof. So Morris, with one look at the blue sky above him, swung into the cage and was lowered alone amid an awe-stricken silen e into the bosom of death. There was not much more to tell. When the signal was given there were willing hands ip deliver the two men from the wreckage, but only one came up alive. The other had succumbed to the fatal damp. A long panegyric followed, but it meant little to Eleanor. Her eyes rested on four oft-quoted, hackneyed lines, that closed the story; they would

CRISPI AND OUIDA SHRIEKINGS The Says There Is a Reign of Terror

The government of Francesco Crispi has sent the country back sixty years, says Oulda in the Contemporary Review. By him and through him all the old instruments of torture are in use. Spies fill the cities, detectives scour the fields, informers listen to all speech, public and private; literary clubs and co-operative societies are arbitrarily dissolved; packed juries condemn; venal judges sentence; military courts imprison civilians; civil courts judge homicidal officers; time serving prefects deny the franchise to all independent thinkers and manipulate the electoral lists to suit their governments; lads as they come singing through the country lanes are arrested if the song is of liberty; little children writing in chalk on he town wall are sent to prison for forty-five days. There is a reign of terfor from Alps to Etns, and the police, armed to the teeth, swarm everywhere and the prisons are crowded with innocent citizens. The country has gone back to the darkest and worst days of Austria and papal tyranny and the name of the tyrant is ostensibly Humbert of Savoy; in reality, Francesco Crispi. Meanwhile there is no check, whatever on the caprices and coercion of his rule. It is already stated that to procure funds, nominally for Africa, actually for the elections, confiscated church property, now state property, is to be largely and without the consent of parliament illegally sold. To any one who cares for liberty and believes it to be the sole moral hygiene of a nation the state of Italy at the present time is painful and humiliating. Equally so to any unbiased English thinker is the attitude of the leading English newspapers upon Italian affairs, which they continuously and sysematically conceal or distort. It is difficult, well-nigh impossible to make the most intelligent Englishman comprehend Italian public life. He is misled by the surface semblance of his own institutions of monarchy, parliament and electorate and he does not comprehend the enormous unlikeness of all these to his own caused by character and custom.

AERIAL TRAVEL,

Limitations Which Surround Animals Their Flight

It is evident that not one of these rould-be flying machine men has ever eriously undertaken to solve the problem mentally, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. There is but one way of getting hrough she air by mechanical aption, and that is by cleavage. There are really only two forms of cleavage, the one as represented by wing action as applied by insects and birds, the other a rotary action as represented by the screw of a steamer. To the application of the wing principle there is a limit set by natural law, just as in animal forms there is a limit set to either bipedal, or quadrupedal construction. There is, perhaps, no form of cleavage that represents the expenditure of force nore economically than wing action as manifested in the flight of a wild goose. Here is an exceptionally large avoirdupois for the wing area, but the bird cannot carry any additional weight. In the birds of prey, the body is lighter in proportion to wing surface—a light, compact frame, but immense muscular action, capable of carrying for a short distance a load of from eight to twelve pounds. But the limit is soon found, and there is not a winged creature on the earth weighing fifty pounds that can mount into the air and cleave as a true flyer. Why do not the ostrich, the great auk, the emu and other congeners f these bird tribes properly fly, since they are equipped with cleavers as are wimmers, as well as fivers, are all, by natural law, limited within certain restrictions, and it is remarkable that these inventors have not learned this. as it is a fact of the utmost importance, and one which, in a careful analysis. must early disclose itself.

To Make Grape Fruit Salad. To make most delicious as well as healthful salad use a good ripe grape-fruit and crisp, fresh head of lettuce. Wash the lettuce and let it stand in cold water till needed, then shake out the leaves and arrange them in the salad bowl. Cut the grape-fruit in half and with a spoon take out all the pulp, taking care to preserve the juice. Arrange the pulp in the lettuce leaves and make a dressing of oil and the juice. To every three tablespoonfuls of this oil allow half a teaspoonful of pepper. Put all these ingredients in a bowl and solve the salt and pepper in the oil, then rub the spoon with a dose of garlio and stir in the juice of the fruit until emulsion is formed. Pour it over the lettuce and pulp and serve at once.

About one teaspoonful of juice should be sufficient for three of oil, but it as not possible to lay down any exact rule, Vigorous stirring is essential, and as soon as a whitish compound is formed the dressing is ready for use.—Philadelphia Record.

A dainty morsel for the hungry half hour before bedtime is "cheese crackers." Spread thin zephyrettes or salted crackers with a little butter and sprinkle lightly with grated Parmesan cheese. Place on a dish in the oven long enough to brown them slightly. These will keep for several days.
