How to Cure Rheumatism.

Arago, Coos Co., Oregon, Nov. 10, 1893: I wish to inform you of the great good Chamberlain's Pain Balm has done my wife. She has been troubled with rheumatism of the hands and arms for six months, and has tried many remedies prescribed for that complaint but found no relief until she used this Pain Balm; one bottle of which has completely cured her. I take pleasure in recommending it for that trouble. Yours truly, C. A. Bullford, 50 cent and $1 bottles for sale by P. C. Corrigan, druggist.

It Exists in a Small Way, But its Palmy Days Have Passed.

In a large wholesale way of business, Levantine piracy may be called extinct. No longer are the tideless waters swept by the galleys of the Algerine, nor do we often at church find collections being made for mariners captive among the Moors. The general old ruffian who made his prisoners drink to the king over the water is to-day extinct. But in a small way, with very limited capital and enterprise sadly thwarted, the isles that burning Sappho loved and sang still see a good deal of business done on the old lines. The practice rather resembles maritime burglary, perhaps, than anything worthy to be called piracy, and the practitioners are natives of mixed race. A small schooner or vessel, a hardy crew, a few Lucifer matches, and such revolvers as can be procured suffice for an outfit. The method is commonly as follows:

The shores of the isles are studded by little villages as far from the sweet ministry of the police as wild Kintail, and we cannot put it more strongly. The wealth of the villagers mainly consists in old silver vessels and ornaments, often of beauty and great antiquity. A sponge diver, for example, has found more than sponges. In the British museum there is a recent acquisition, a pot made of gold, weighing as much as 100 sovereigns. This was brought up from a classical wreck by a sponge diver, and it is likely enough that such discoveries are frequently made and concealed. The villagers have also the silver ornaments of their women's dowries, often old and curious, and there may be a few relics of antique gems, rings, necklets, and armlets, spoils of ravages of the Mycenaean age. As the tax gatherers are prompt to levy on all property, this little wealth is, of course, carefully hidden, perhaps under the thatch. The pirate's first care is to obtain private information as to who is rich among the people apparently as destitute as the old fishermen in Theocritus. When he has learned as much as he can he launches his bark under some equivalent for the Jolly Roger, he lands at the sleeping village under cover of night, surrounds the cottage, and, as a rule, places the householder on fire, or ties him up in a sack with a pair of cats, or otherwise prevails on him to disclose the hiding place of his valuables. Then the gallant pirate sails away and it is all over.
