CANADA'S PHOSPHATE MINES.

A Collapse in the Industry Caused by the Competition of Florida.

The phosphate mining interests of Canada are in a state of utter collapse at present, and to remedy this state of affairs the Canadian Mining association, which meets in Quebec, proposes to endeavor to induce the Dominion and provincial governments to introduce the general use of phosphate fertilizers on Canadian farms through the agency of the experimental farms, says a Quebec special. As an illustration of the stagnation of this branch of mining, it may be mentioned that three years ago 8,000 men were employed in phosphate mining in Ottawa county alone, while today not three-score men are thus engaged. The cause of the collapse is the competition in the English markets of the phosphate of Algeria and the high-grade product of Florida, which can be worked and marketed much more cheaply. The mining men point out that lands in Georgia have advanced in price from $3 to $50 an acre through the use of fertilizers. Many, in fact, most of the farms of Quebec have been exhausted by the wasteful and unscientific farming of the habitants, and so the necessity of doing something to improve their farming methods, and thus relieve the phosphate miners, will be pressed upon the government. Phosphate was mined extensively in Canada until recently. The principal mines were in Ottawa county, and the output averaged from 50,000 to 25,000 tons. The higher grades were shipped to Europe and the lower found a market in the United States. The large profits led to the opening of new mines, and considerable of a boom took place. The excitement culminated in the formation of the General Phosphate Corporation, Limited, with a capital of $1,000,000, and 1,000 acres were acquired in Ottawa county at an outlay of $25,000.

High-salaried and inexperienced men were engaged both in London and at the mines. Then followed the development of high-grade phosphates in Florida and the flooding of the European markets therewith caused a big drop in the price of Canadian phosphates. The mines were compelled to suspend or reduce operations, and the shipments fell from 20,000 tons in 1893 to 4,000 tons in 1894. This year there is practically nothing doing.

DINING WITH THE PRINCE.

What People May Expect Who Receive an Invitation to His Table.

The prince of Wales' dinner begins punctually at 8:45 p. m., and lasts an hour and ten minutes. Rapid service is a household law, and is quite necessary as the menu is rather extended, though not ostentatiously elaborate. Four or five waiters only are allowed to enter the dining hall. The kitchen is, of course, at some distance, but for the sake of dispatch a serving-room adjoins the dining-hall, and here a little army of assistants supplies the waiters at an instant's notice. Soft, low music is played during the entire hour. The menu card is almost severe in its plainness, having simply a narrow gold border, surmounted by the royal crest, and is always printed in French. The courses are arranged in first and second service. In each course an alternation of china and silver plates is strictly observed; for instance, turtle soup in silver plates and bique in china plates. For the first course a fillet of trout artistically garnished, upon an oval entree dish of silver, and sole with rich "sauce" on a china plate, guests being given choice of either fish. "Cotelettes de volailles" and "chaud froid" follow; and then comes haunches of venison on large silver dishes, and saddles of mutton, also on silver. The meats are all previously carved in the serving room. Dainty desserts conclude the bountiful repast.

Education.
