

QUEER, white face, ghastly as death, glared in at the window of Carl Manning's shanty. Carl looked up from his book instinctively. He had heard no sound, but he felt the presence, and just then the moon broke clear from behind a cloud and he saw the ghastly face distinctly.

"My God! How horrible!" he cried involuntarily, and then, as the face disappeared as suddenly as it came, he caught his hat from the peg by the door and rushed out into the darkness after

Carl had been at Little Gulch only a short time, but even a trifling stay was long enough to learn the story of that ghastly apparition. A miner's daughter had been cruelly murdered here in the Gulch years ago, and on every gusty, moonlight night her face was seen at some shanty window, and here Carl prused in his hurried race, for he remembered the end of the tradition.

'To see that face means death or trouble," he whispered in the darkness, and then he grasped his stout stick tighter. "There's always trouble in the world," he muttered philosophically, he muttered philosophically, "and if it wasn't for Kitty I should say that death was welcome.'

He caught his hat just as an eddying gust raised it deftly from his head, and then seeing how foolish was his search in this shadowy darkness, turned slowly from the task he had undertaken and went back to his book in the little shanty.

It was a copy of Poe that he was reading, and as he picked it up again he was amazed to find that the page where he had stopped so suddenly had been completely torn across the middle. He stared at it vacantly at first, but there it was, the beautiful rhythm of 'Annabel Lee" torn in a jagged line, as if by hasty fingers, and search where he would in the humble cabin the other half of the page was nowhere to be found.

Carl sat down with his back to the window and began to ferret the matter

"It was bad enough for her to scare me half out of my senses," he solilo-quized, "but to come in while I was searching the place over for her and tear my book is a little too mean for anything." He looked at the injured volume ruefully and shook his head. "Not another to be found within a thousand miles, I'll wager," he muttered, bitterly, "and to think that 'Annabel Lee,' the prettiest poem in the whole copy, should be the one she chose

And then he began thinking over the story of the murdered maiden. She had been foully killed by a jealous lover, they said, and now no man at the Little Gulch but dreaded her acts of ghost ly vengeance. It was a romantic story in its way, and the more he thought of It the more it came to him that "Annabel Lee" was not so inappropriate after all, and might bring some comfort to the flitting spirit. For Carl was sure It was none other than the ghostly visltor at his window who had entered his cabin in his absence, and now, yes, there was another presence in the casing, but for a moment he found it his outstretched arms. "Take me with pround and face it.

But it was not necessary for him to

A Face Glared In at the Window. took this time, for his visitors were each and all most tangible and moreover they were eager to make known

Carl sprang to his feet in amazement when a half dozen rough-clad miners slouched through the door and stood in a threatening group before him. He knew instantly why they had come, and then, curiously enough, the warning of the dead girl's face flashed suddenly upon him.

"Too bad she couldn't have peeped in at me sooner," he muttered beneath nis breath, "for then at least I could have had my weapon and been ready for this gang of ruffians."

"You be a little surprised tew see we 'uns," the foremost of his visitors said coarsely, as he noticed Carl's evident agitation. "You thought you'd kivered your tracks, you dog, an' that we wuz all so stoopid in the Gulch 'at we wouldn't find out you wuz a spotter."

Carl recovered himself instantly and leaning back, now perfectly composed, placed his elbow on the rude pine man-

"You are six to one, Mr. Johnson," he said coldly. "If you are not afraid of me, send your men outside and we will have a word in private."

The moment his words escaped his lips he was surprised at the consternation that he saw before him. In an instant it occurred to him that they, too, had seen the apparition, and were thoroughly frightened of the darkness

"There's no use talkin' to us tonight," the man Johnson said, with a perceptible shudder, "for we've seen the Spirit of the Gulch, an' one an' all we've had our warnin'." Then as if the courage of his crowd rested alone on prompt activity, he drew a long, black rope from his pocket and looped it over a convenient rafter. Carl Manning braced himself and looked the man squarely in the eye as be finished his ominous contrivance. "Call me what you will," he said quietly, "I came out here in the interests of the mine to learn exactly what you were doing. If you were honest you would not fear me, but as you are only a pack of thieves and murderers you tremble at my presence here and have brought your gang of six to one to shoot me down or hang me."

Then he folded his arms and raised his head and his voice rang out determinedly:

"Do your worst, you pack of ravening wolves! Lay your plans to destroy my work-plot your brave schemes to take my life-prepare the noose, the rope, the knife, have everything ready to add one more murder to your list and then-then lay your hands upon me -if you dare!" And his eyes glared at them savagely with the fury of an angry tiger. Hardly had his voice ceased to echo through the shanty when one of the ruffians sprang forward with a shout and snatched his pistol from the table.

"He is unarmed! Take him by force!" he shouted, viciously, and the whole gang surged forward together as if to tear his limbs asunder.

"Stand back!" Carl's voice rang out boldly, then quick as lightning his arm shot forth and a blow felled the nearest brute to the floor. Then, just as he recovered himself for a second attack, his eyes were drawn irresistibly toward the window, where once more the ghastly face of the girl peered in upor the scene before her "Look there!" Carl whispered tragisally, as he pointed toward the window There is the ghost of your murdered girl! How dare you think to slay an other?"

As if expecting and dreading this very apparition, the men turned, almost with one accord, and glanced in fear at the narrow window. There was a shrick from one, a curse from another, and, seing his chance in that moment of horior, Carl sprang forward and wrenched his pistol from the leader's hand, and for a second the whole place bellowed with the rapid emptying of its Springing over that jumble of writhing forms, Carl hundedly collected his papers, and then remembering, even in his danger, the volume of poems, he snatched the book from the table and thrust it into his pocket. Then he picked his way carefully across rocks, a few stray bullets keeping him ominous company, and by running always in the shadow, was soon far away from the little shanty.

"There is a train at eleven," he whispered to himself, "that will take me east of the Mississippi," and then he stopped running, almost too suddenly, as another vision came swiftly upon

"Kitty!" he called tenderly; "Kitty, darling, is it you, or am I still in the land of spirits?"

Without a sound the young girl hurgled toward him and threw herself into me with you or they will kill me too," and Carl, almost without a thought of what he was doing, half led, half careled her to the station.

A year later in their Eastern house. Carl Manning and his wife sat down for their after-dinner chatting.

"So old Tom Johnson was not your father, after all," Carl said over and ever, as though the repetition of the words were something more than ordinarily pleasant. Then he took her on his knee and his face assumed a milk is shipped to those in want of it thoughtful expression.

"Well, I am glad I did not kill him, any way," he said softly, "although the owner of the mine says I might just as well have done so, for I crippled every man of them that evening." Then he smiled more tenderly into her eyes as he added in a lighter tone: "But what I am sorry for, little one, is that I did not wait to solve the mystery of that woman's face, for as I live, it was she that saved me!"

Without a word Kitty slid down from his knee and began ransacking in her verily believe, growing better. The box of treasures. "Will this help you any to lay her ghost?" she said, merrily, and then she unfolded before his stonished eyes the half of his poem, "Annabel Lee," and tried to smooth out the jagged edges.

In Hard Luck

in Chicago recently, Richard Burns said to be a dangerous man, was arrested and ordered to leave town. He was before Justice Underweed and was asked to explain why he did not depart according to orders

"Your honor," answered Burns, "I have tried to leave town and simply man't do it. As soon as I was ordered to go I went to the Rock Island tracks and flipped a train. A brakeman saw me and kicked me off before the train reached Thirty-third street. Then I went over to the Santa Fe yards and got heaven because he was poor, but beinto a box car. Somebody came along cause he was plous; and that Dives was and ran me out with a club. Next I ried the Northwestern and I'll never so there any more. By this time, your honor, I was so lame I could hardly walk. Nevertheless I started out on P. S. Henson, Baptist, Chicago, Ill. foot and walked toward the drainage canal. A farmer came out of the first farm house I passed and set a dog on me. The dog chased me back into the city, and here I am again!" Burns was given a small fine and promised to swim across the lake, it necessary, to get away from town.

QUEEN A MILKMAID.

WILHELMINA A BENEFIT TO PUBLIC HEALTH.

Urges Her Subjects to Test the Virtues of Ass's Milk-Royal Friends Asked to Help-To Those Who Need

HE Hague Correspondence: Little Queen Wilhelmina had a very busy ante-holiday season, as the letters addressed by her youthful majesty to other monarchs throughout Europe imposed upon the writer considertble mental work. In offering her asual congratulations to her "Good Brothers" and "Good Sisters"-as form of address between royal personages reads-she asked each to consider a little scheme of her own for the good of the poor of all lands, enclosing at the same time medical reports and statistics from the royal donkey farms, of which there are now five in number

Queen Wilhelmina is the largest donkey ranchero on the continent, and having personally experienced the nutritiousness of ass's milk is anxious to popularize the custom among wealthy women to keep a number of donkeys for the purpose of donating their milk for the use of poor infants and invalids.

Several years ago Queen Wilhelmina was pretty generally believed to be suffering from consumption; her father, King William III., was sixty-three years old at her birth, and much the worse for sickness and dissipation. The child was weak and pale during the first ten or twelve years of her life, and Wilhelmina being the last of her race the Hollanders became almost reconciled to the thought that their beloved country would sooner or later be swallowed up by one of its big neighbors. But one day, upon the occasion of a visit to her mother's brother, the Prince of Waldeck, Wilhelmina learned that they bring up weakly children in many of the poorer regions of Germany on ass's milk with the best possible results. She resolved at once to try the outlandish remedy, and although her taste revolted her strong mind was victorious in the end. As a consequence she re turned from Pyrmont with elastic step and rosy cheeks, and all Holland was delighted when the people learned of place in the condition of their youthful sovereign.

Several wealthy Netherlanders now presented the child-queen with donkeys of more or less high degree, and soon there was more ass's milk in the royal larder than the young mistress could concume. Then Wilhelmina and her mother went on tours of inspection in the poorer quarters of The Hague and Rotterdam, and wherever they discovered a wee baby or a consumptive needing special nourishment they sent bottles of ass's milk, with a good-natured command that the child or invalid should be fed on it. The Netherlanders are a headstrong race, very much opposed to innovation. The novel gift was therefore not always appreciated, and some people protested quite vigorously against partaking of the "nasty stuff." To these parties the two queens traveled on foot or by carriage, as the case might be, and when Wilhelmina had told her own experience with ass's milk, the "kickers" generally gave in, and those depending upon their advice were better for it afterward.

Pretty soon reports came in from all sides about the wonderful cures effected by this natural remedy, and Wilhelmina resolved to increase her stock of donkeys, adding several pairs to each of the royal estates. From there the in the cities and around the country. Other rich women followed the leadership of their young and lovely sovereign no opiates. Price 25 and 50 cents. and, thanks to this, ass's milk has be come quite a common article of nourishment in the Netherlands.
