State Journal: The Denver Times recently contained an interesting article calling attention to the intimate relationship existing between that city and Duluth. It was emphasized that by building less than 800 miles of railroad between Julesburg and O'Neill, a short-cut outlet for Denver products would be formed. This railroad would develop a large tract of Nebraska land, and would be a good thing all around. Congressman Towne is at the head of the project.

Exchange: It has been shown by analysis that a young lady weighing 150 pounds is composed of 96 pounds of water, 3 pounds white of egg, a little less than a pound of pure glue, 84 pounds of fat, 84 pounds of phosphate of lime, 8 ounces of sugar and starch, 7 ounces of phosphate of magnesia, and a little ordinary table salt. Think of it young man. That beautiful young lady whom you worship as a pillar of unadulterated sweetness, don't contain three ounces of sugar.

Exchange: One young lady of Jolin, Kan., refuses to pay her election bet! The proposition was made by her because she was so sure Bryan would be elected that she agreed to stand on her head five minutes if McKinley was elected, provided a certain young man would do likewise if Bryan was elected. Silas Purdy and Gus Shrader, of Atkinson, were arrested by Sheriff Hamilton last Thursday on a warrant sworn out by Fred Hans, a detective in the employ of the F. E. & M. V. railroad, charging them with stealing coal from the company. They were brought to O'Neill Thursday morning and taken before Judge McCutchan for trial. A continuance was taken until Friday morning, when the case against Purdy was tried to a jury in county court. The jury found him not guilty, and the company then dismissed the case against Shrader.

Plattsmouth News: It is pretty certain that there will be a change in the form of the Australian ballot in Nebraska before many more elections are held. And there should be. The average man needs a towel tied about his head when he goes into the voting booth that he may concentrate all of his mental faculties on the puzzle. The form used in Iowa is very simple. When the voter desires to cast a straight ballot he has only to mark a cross in a circle at the head, each party having a separate column. A still greater improvement would be for each party to have an emblem and print it at the head of the ticket. In this way a child could vote as intelligently as a man.

The damage case of Mrs. Gallagher against the city of O'Neill was tried to an arbitration board consisting of M. D. Long, John J. Kelly and Chas. Wilcox, the first of the week. R. R. Dickson and Judge Roberts represented the plaintiff, while City Attorney Carlson looked after the interest of the city. The plaintiff alleged that in June, 1895, while coming from church, one Sunday morning, she fell on the sidewalk near Mann's store, on account of a defect in the walk, and received injuries which confined her to her bed for about nine weeks, and claimed permanent injury to her back. Some time last summer she brought suit against the city for $1,000 damage for said injuries. Shortly before court convened, both parties agreed to submit the case to arbitration, and it was tried last week, the board deciding for the city. City Attorney Carlson is making an enviable record for himself by his management, and the care he takes in guarding the city's interests. He has looked after the interests of the tax payers of this city in three damage cases, and in these cases has been pitted against some of the ablest attorneys in the northwest, but notwithstanding this fact he secured the verdict in each case. It is conceded by nearly all attorneys that it is very hard to prevent a person from securing a verdict against a corporation or municipality in a suit for damages, and Mr. Carlson's victories must be very gratifying to him and his many friends.

The boxing entertainment, came off on schedule time at the opera house last Saturday evening, and the contestants were greeted with a crowded house. After a few bouts between some of "little" fellows, Ed Graham and Geo. Parnell donned the gloves for a three round friendly "go." It was rather tame, as Parnell, while he is the larger man, is no match for Graham, who could hop around and tap him when and where he pleased. With proper training, however, we believe that Parnell would be able to hold his own with any of them, even some of the famous heavy weights. One of the important bouts was a six round "scrap" between Harry Gillespie and Tracy Gwin for a purse. Guy Hamilton was bottle holder for Gillespie, while "Sally" Gwin looked after Tracy. Dominick McCaffrey was selected as referee. The boys showed the crowd a good time, and put up a good article of "scrap." Gwin was the aggressor all through the fight, and several times crowded Gillespie to the ropes, but Harry got in some good ducks and dodges, and got out of the way. He kept away and let Gwin force matters until he was nearly out of wind, when Harry got in a few good ones that scored several points to his credit. The referee declared it a draw and divided the purse; the decision giving general satisfaction. Sam Thompson and Ed Graham then entertained each other and the crowd for a few minutes to the satisfaction of all. Dominick McCaffrey then gave an exhibition of ball punching that was thoroughly enjoyed by the "sports," after which he put the gloves on with his brother, Joe, for a two-round "bout." For a heavy man Dominick is very quick on his feet, likewise with his "dukes," as was observed by the crowd when he tapped Joe three times before he could get away. It is very hard for a man to show what he can do unless he has someone who can make it fairly interesting for him. But there is no question but what he could make some of the "big boys" lay down now if he should go up against them.

ALFALFA CULTURE. WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 15, 1896. Dear Sir: Your letter of 5th inst. came duly, and is now reached in due course of business.

You inquire as to the culture of alfalfa, taking how to successfully sow and reap it, and the soil and climate conditions of its successful growth. The plant flourishes best on soils of an open porous nature. In arid regions where the common sages of the plains flourish, there in the same soils alfalfa will grow to perfection. The ground water should not come within six feet of the surface at any time; a limit insuring success in growing the plant if from fourteen to forty feet below the surface.

The surface of an alfalfa field must be well drained, that is, rolling or sloping enough to quickly carry off all surplus rain or irrigation water. The subsoil should be an open, porous one, through which the roots of the plant can readily penetrate to the ground water below the surface. The subsoil should be, if possible, a naturally moist one, but if you can irrigate your field this matter is of no consequence.

Alfalfa will not flourish upon wet lands, nor in situations where the ground water is within six feet of the surface, nor over unduly wet and stagnant subsoils; nor will it grow to its full vigor upon a surface where the subsoil is rock, hard pan or stiff clay, all impervious to the roots of the plant. It will not grow upon a surface without irrigation where the subsoil is made up of beds of dry sand, gravel or other materials affording no nutriment or moisture for a depth below the surface from twelve feet to greater depths. It can be successfully grown upon such subsoils if you have plenty of water to irrigate with.

Prepare the land for sowing by a thorough cultivation, pulverizing it very finely. Sow the seed at the time you sow spring wheat in your locality. Sow 25 to 30 pounds per acre, 20 being the usual quantity. If the ground be weedy, sow 30 pounds. Do not sow any other grain or seed with it.

If sown broadcast, cover the seed with a light harrowing; a large bunch of brush dragged over the field in two directions at right angles will do it nicely. If drilled in, set the drill to plant the seed not more than one inch deep; then, if you can, run a roller over the field to compact its surface. This is much needed if the soil is a light one and your locality at the seeding time is troubled by high winds.

If you have the water, give the field a light irrigation after the rolling. The amount of three inches in depth for the whole surface of the field will suffice.

Subsequently, the irrigation of the crop should be done after each cutting, in amount three inches in depth, as before stated. Alfalfa rarely needs irrigation except in the very dry and hot regions of this country, but can be grown anywhere that the subsoil conditions are suited to it and the annual rainfall amounts to 12 or 15 inches. In regions where the rainfall ranges from 24 inches upwards, the plant should be cultivated upon rolling lands to insure a ready draining of the surface after the rains.

It should be cut as soon as the first few purple blossoms are to be seen over the field. If you wait until the whole field is in blossom, the stalks will then have become woody or toughly fibrous and unfit for feed, but if cut at the right time the whole plant will be eaten with avidity by your stock. In the arid regions all farm stock is fattened upon it, including hogs and chickens. Look out for the bloating of your stock when first turned upon the pasture, or if they break into the fields of the plant, for they gorge themselves upon it at their first feeding so that fermentation sets in and runs its course with great rapidity. The quickest and surest remedy is to open the paunch by means of a small sharp-pointed knife blade inserted in the open space just in front of the hip bone and between that and the ribs on the right hand side of horned cattle. It is best to prevent such attacks by a preparatory feed of the stock for a week or ten days before turning them into the pasture, giving them small quantities of green alfalfa at a time, and it will be well to take the stock out of the field after a short feed upon it each day for two or three days before leaving them in for all day.

Very truly yours, CHAS. W. IRISH, Chief of Irrigation Inquiry.

Once a man had 1000 bushels of wheat which he sold, but in a short time he had but 1000 different bushels. He had these paid him cash, but for the number said it was not convenient but would pay later. A few days passed and the man's bank account was low. "How is this," he said, "1000 bushels of wheat should have me in a comfortable position, but I have paid my grain and have in its stead a small amount of small accounts, no money numerous and annoying that I get around and collect for my expenses." He had no more action, and asked all who were in the same case and pay quickly. Not only a coin. The rest said: "What is the little matter and I will go and get of these days, forgetting that work meant was very small, but work put together they amount to the man. Things will not till the man got to feeling as he rolled and thought about it in a to express his opinion that he was a swab, and quickly reaching the grocery found the 1000 bushels of wheat still in his mind. He had only one and had not said his wheat was a MORAL.—The man who has the money to the publisher of his country said: "Here is, in the newspaper, and when the description is due you can see me to pay promptly. I will get the position of the office but you know how it is to be done. I have earned dollars instead of cents in country in small accounts." The editor called out said: "What are you the first man who is going to look at this matter from the point."
