THE OLD FRIENDS.

The old friends, the old friends
We loved when we were young,
With sunshine on their faces
And music on their torque!
The cees are in the almond flower.
The birds renew their strain:
But the old friends, one lost to us,
Can never come again.

The old friends, the old friends!
Their brow is lined with care:
They've furrows in the fided cheek
And silver in the hair:
But to me they are the old friends still
In youth and bloom the same
As when we drove the flying ball
Or shouted in the game.

THE STOLEN JEWELS.

"Why," cried Eleanor Goode, "it's s perfect palace! I really had no idea of grandeur like this.

"Isn't it?" echoed Miriam Kasson. "I wish, dear, I could ask you to stay and spend the day, but I dare not; I'm too much of a stranger here to take any liberties."
"Oh, I shouldn't expect it!" said

Eleanor, looking around at the decorated ceilings, pale blue silk draperies and lovely bits of land-scape on the walls. "I know exactly how you're situated, Milly. But can't you come shopping with me? Bob has given me a five-dollar bill to buy a new gown with, and there are some of the sweetest old-blue ginghams at Tuck & Nipp's."

Miss Kasson shook her head. "Impossible!" said she. "You see the family have gone to Barrington to a funeral, and I am left in charge.
And you don't know," she added, with a comical little pursing up of the lips, "how afraid I am of Mrs. Yerkes, the housekeeper, or how my heart beats when I feel myself compelled to give an order to the butler." "I wish I were you!" cried Eleanor. "It would be such fun."

"One hardly knows," sighed Miriam, whether one is a lady or a servant!

"Oh, there can't be much doubt of that!" said Eleanor. "Look at yourself in the mirror, dear. Wouldn't you say you beheld a princess in dis-guise?"

"Nonsense! But at least let me get you a glass of cool water, Nell; you look so flushed with your long walk."

She slipped away, while Eleanor beguiled the time of her absence by a lengthened survey of herself in the mirror.

Yes, it was no unsatisfactory view -a dimpled, rosy young Venus, with sparkling hazel eyes, red lips and a couplexion of purest pink and white. And then-Good gracious! one of the ribbon loops of her airy summer dress had come loose. She looked frantically around for a pin to repair damages, but no pin was to be seen.

"They're in the bureau drawer," said she to herself. "Milly always was too distressingly neat for anything. Oh, here they are!" grasping at a paper of pins. "And here too oh, the delicious little glutton!here's a box of chocolate caramels, tied with pink ribbon. I'll teach her to hide her sweeties away from me! How she will stare when she finds them gone!"

It was the act of a moment to whisk the bon-bon box into her little shopping-bag and appear deeply absorbed in repairing the damages to her wardrobe, when Miss Kasson came in, bringing a glass of water and some fancy crackers on a small Japanese tray.

ous emporium of Messrs. Tuck & Nipp, the "bargains" in old blue ginghams were gone, and nothing remained "fit to be seen" at any price to which she could venture to aspire, and so she betook herself sorrowfully to the pretty flat which she called home.

And none too soon, for a telegram awaited her there, announcing that her mother, in Orange county, was very ill, and it was necessary for her to go thither at once.

At the end of two weeks she brought her mother home nearly recovered. Little Sarah, the youngest sister, received her joyfully.

"It's been so lonesome without you, Nell," said she. "I've kept house beautifully, only Biddy has scorched the oatmeal every morning. and the coffee hasn't tasted just right, and Bob has been so busy he couldn't find time to go walking with "Busy!" satirically echoed Eleanor. "Oh, but he really was! He's got a real case, Bob has, and it's awful interesting, too. The judge assigned it to him because the defendant-I think that's the proper law phrase, with a pretty little wrinkling of the eyebrows-"hadn't any means to provide one for herself. And she's ever so pretty, Bob says, and he's quite sure she isn't guilty; and won't it be strange," nestling her curly head against her mother's shoulder, "if Bob should fall in love with his first client?"

Eleanor looked distressed. "Mother," said she, "didn't I tell you what would come of your allowing Sarah to read so many novels? In love, indeed! Most likely the woman is an adventuress." "All the same," persisted Sarah, "Bob says it's a very interesting case, and it's in all the papers headed, 'The Great Diamond Robbery." "Well, I declare!" said Mrs. Goode. who shared the romantic proclivities of her young daughter. "A diamond robbery and a beautiful girl! Of course she didn't do it."

"Oh," cried Eleanor, impatiently, stamping her foot. "how impracticable you all are! Why shouldn't she be guilty? Can't a pretty girl be wicked as well as a plain one? As if looks mattered! But all the same I'm glad Bob has had a good opening in the courts. And now, mamma, you must have a cup of tea, and lie down awhile before dinner. I'll go out for a little; I want to see a dear friend of N. Y. Journal.

"There's Nell's shopping-bag," said the little girl. "It's littler than mother's and bigger than mine."

"Get it, then—quick! there's a dear little dot! Oh, don't stop to dust it!"

"But I must," pleaded the housewifely little thing. "It was on top of the wardrobe where Nell put it before she went to Orange county to bring mother home. And it's-awfully dusty! And I think there's something in it, too.' "Pshaw!" said he impatiently. "A the lid dropped off, and little Sarah. standing on tiptoe to look into the bag, stepped back with a shriek. Something from the inside seemed to flash up into their eyes like imprisoned fire.

At the same time Eleanor came into the room, flinging her hat and scarf wearily down.
"So," cried Robert looking up with a face which would have furnished a study to any physiognomist, "you are the one who stole the Grafton diamonds!"

·I? The Grafton diamonds? What do you mean, Bob? Have you gone crazy?" gasped Eleanor. "What are you doing in my room?"
"We found the diamonds here in a box in your leather bag," said her "The diamond necklace for the theft of which poor Miss Kasson is on trial!"

"Miss-Kasson. You never meant that it is Miriam Kasson-my friend "Didn't I tell you so this very day?" cried Goode.

"You never mentioned her name at all. You kept saying my 'client'— 'the defendant.' But, oh, Bob, I know it all now! I was there-st the big house on Fifty-seventh street. the day before I went to Orange county for mother. I was in Miriam's room, and I opened her bureau drawer to find a pin, and I thought it would be a joke to take her box of candy away. I never opened it. I never dreamed what was in it, and when I got home and found the telegram from Aunt Laura, I first flung the bag down and thought no more of the whole thing. Oh, poor, poor darling Milly! But how came the diamonds in her possession?"

"Don't you know? But how should you possid Mr. Goode. "The necklace was put in her special charge to be delivered to the jeweler who was to call for it at 3 o'clock. And when he came it was gone. But it's all right now. Great Scott! Nell, who would suppose that you were the thief!" Eleanor made an hysteric grasp at her brother's arm. "Will they arrest me, Bob?" stammered she. "Will they put me in prison? But I don't care, so long as Milly is no longer unjustly suspected. Yes, I am a thief! But-but I didn't know it. And I never meant it!"

And she burst into a storm of mingled toars and laughter. There was a rather unusual scene in court that day when the necklace itself was presented in evidence before the legal luminaries. The complaint was withdrawn and the prisoner honorably discharged. The composed and aristocratic Mrs. General Grafton was greatly moved and made many apologies to Miss Easson for the position she had

The newspaper reporters got a great many "points" for the evening editions, and Mr. Goode, the "rising young lawyer," left the court, with Miss Easson leaning on his arm, amid a tempest of applause.

"Lucky dog, that!" said his com-peers. "After this his fortune is made!" "And all because of my foolish lit-tle practical joke," said Eleanor.

"After this I shall never want to ok at a chocolate again. Bu. darling, why didn't you send to me in "Could I bear to have my den-

WHAT IS A MILLION?

Suggestions as to How a Conception May Be Formed.

If you want to get swamped with figures, supposing at least you have the conception of what is a million of dollars, the total stock of money in the world is $3,656,985,000 in gold and $3,-944,700,000 in silver, making a grand total of $7,601,635,000. Say that the population of the United States is 65,-000,000, then about this amount of money, $10.47 in gold, $8.55 in silver, $6.51 in paper notes, or $25.62, suffices for each one's use. If there was not as much money as that per head-little boys and little girls and little bables included—the fathers, who hold the purse-strings, would complain that money was tight or hard to get, and exchange of goods for coin would be diffi-

When you come to figures in their application to time most of us get quite lost. We call this year 1896that is 1896 years since the birth of Christ. In the history of the world that is only an instant, and yet it seems so far distant as to be somewhat out of our comprehension. But what is the mental process which can span the period between to-day and the time when the pyramids were built—say 3,000 years before the birth of Christ. Perhaps one way of comprehending it is to divide every 100 years by three, because 33 1-3 years may about repre sent a generation.

Suppose we take the conquest of England by William of Normandy, and his coronation at Westminster, in 1066. That was 830 years ago. In the eight centuries there would be about three generations for each 100 years, and that would make twenty-five generations and twenty-nine years over. Let us say the event took place twentyfive generations ago-it is curious dividing time in that way-how much nearer William the Conqueror seems to be to us.

There is only one trouble about this method; it is the sense of humiliation it causes, because twenty-five or thirty generations ago our forefathers must have been rather savage people. At the same time we have the consolation of knowing that we have improved since then. Why Christopher Columbus found America only twelve generations back—and there are many people alive who have seen five generations, counting themselves. It does not do, however, to go too far back, say to the forefather who was alive when the pyramid was reared. I do not understand 1,964 generations ago.—Harper's Round Table.

The Olympic Heralda When the precise day for the beginning of the festival was determined. peace-heralds were dispatched months in advance to all the cities of Greece. One went northward as far as the Propontis and the Black sea; a second eastward to the islands, the coast of Asia Minor, to Egypt, and to Syria; and a third westward to the Greek colonies in Sicily, southern Italy, Gaul, and Spain. In order to accomplish this gigantic task it was necessary for them to appoint delegates to notify the smaller or more distant towns. It was cities should receive an official announcement of the great festival. For ed their coming and were ready to entertain them. In turn wealthy or inof the Greek world were designated as public guests. When they came to Olympia they received important privileges, were lodged and feasted at public expense, and were given the seats of honor at the games. All classes, however, flocked to Olympia, some in vessels, from across the sea, some in chariots or on horseback, while others, like Socrates, made the long journey on foot. Those who were not guests of honor spread their many-colored tents in the plain, while others slept under the open sky.

The Bloomers Failed. Bloomers as an aid to smuggling were tried by two San Francisco girls in an experiment that failed. The girls took passage to Honolulu on one of the mail steamers, and excited the suspicion of the Hawaiian customs officers by going ashore clad in voluminous bloemers. They were followed to a house in Honolulu, where the discarded bloomers and sixty tins of smuggled opium were found. The girls were arrested and convicted of smuggling, but on appeal to the Supreme Court the case against them was dismissed because their guilt was not proven clearly. The gir'- returned to San Francisco a few days ago in the steerage, wearing skirts.

A Rare Stamp. A postage stamp which is pronounced the rarest in the world has just been brought to light in Louisville. A collector there asked permission to rummage among the correspondence of an old lawyer with the result that he found one Baltimore postmaster's stamp (19 cents), on original cover: five New York five cent stamps: 150 United States five cent stamps of 1847: 110 United States 10 cent stamps of 1847. A Few of His Peculiar Ways of Trans acting Busine

There is little in the animal kingdom that can look so dead and be so much alive as a crocodile, says the Pall Mall Gazette. The number of unsuspecting persons who have mistaken him for a log, and have failed to discover their mistake until it was too late to be of any benefit to them, will never be known. In ancient times, several years prior to the British occupation god, there being nothing else like him. The fed him on dainties and togged him out with jewelry. In other parts of Egypt, however, the natives looked upon him as a devil. Having no firearms, they did not fill him with lead, but they managed to immolate him successfully with such weapons as were fashionable at the time. The crocodile is not so numerous in the Rameses family. In fact, he rather no unpleasant one; representatives of inseparable from tourist traffic. He will not molest a man unless he can take him at a disadvantage, and so long as man does not unthinkingly step on him the crocodile will go his own way and calmly await his opportunity. He feeds on fish, but for a course dinner he would rather have humanity, black preferred, which shows that there is no accounting for taste even among reptiles. His methods for capturing large game are plural as well as singular. Sometimes he will lie on a river bank, partly covered with sand or mud, until an absent-minded native wanders within reach. Having grabbed his prey, he will waddle into the water, and there drown the struggler. He will then drag his victim ashore and bury him in sand or mud, and wait for days before he gorges himself.

HISTORIC QUEBEC.

Parts of it Suggestive of Scenes in the Old World.

From Quebec a correspondent write to the Paris Messenger: "Ici on parle francais" might be written on the portals of this quaint and picturesque old city. Strolling in lower Quebec, you might easily fancy yourself in Amiens or Dieppe. In the upper town there is more English, but everywhere an amusing mixture. On the same card you will read "Maison a louer," "House to let;" on one side of the door "Pas d'admission sans affaires" and on the other "No admittance except on business." This bilingual necessity cause a little extra painting and printing. Each railway crossing must be marke likewise, "Traverse du chemin de fer' and every official "notice" must be printed also in full as an "Avis." The blending is often curious, as when two adjoining shops have their announcements one in French and the other in English. Along the Grande Alle, running right across the Plains of Abraham, you might be in Brussels or Paris, only that Clifton terrace seem to recall you to Kensington. American travelers for whom Europe is too distant are advised to go to Quebec, there to find a bit of the mediaeval old world transplated to the new, but still embalmed in its ancient religious sentimentalism, upon which the rush and roar of modern unrest produce as little effect as the Atlantic breakers on the cliffs of Cape Breton.
