THE DUPLICITY OF IT.

ELL, old fellow, I wish you joy," said Huntly Johnson, when his friend Dick Beaufort, after the fashion of the newly-accepted lover, had finished a paenegyric in praise of his lady-love.

"Don't you think she is quite the loveliest girl in London, Huntly?" continued Beaufort, ardently. "Yes, old man," replied his friend, "I think she is much better looking than that celebrated actress, Kitty Hawthorne, whom you—er—well, were rather sweet on, don't you know?"

"I certainly did make a fool of myself over that girl, but that was some time ago. I hope Dorothy has never heard about it. You know, she is just a little bit jealous," said Dick Beaufort, a trifle uneasily.

"How in the world can you know anything about it, old chap," said Beaufort, rather surprised; "but I have heard you were rather gone on her yourself not long ago, and in fact, that you proposed to her, eh?"

"Well, I'm going out this evening. Sorry I can't ask you to come with me. Hope you'll enjoy yourself, old man." "I dare say I shall," responded Johnson, trying to force a smile.

"So she has flitted me and accepted Dick Beaufort, has she?" soliloquized the young man. "Well, I always thought that I was rather more of a favorite with the girls than he, but then, he is so handsome. He thought, for some time, and as he pondered his face grew darker and darker. "No," he suddenly shouted, "he sha'n't marry her; though he is my greatest friend. God knows I love her more than I do him. But how can I prevent it?"

"The door banged, and Huntly Johnson was left alone with his thoughts, which were not of the most pleasing character. "So she has flitted me and accepted Dick Beaufort, has she?" soliloquized the young man.

"I'm afraid she means to give you up, old boy. She said nothing to me about it, though. I should go and see her if I were you; there is evidently some misunderstanding." Johnson knew he was quite safe in saying that much, as he felt sure Dorothy would refuse to see Dick.

son. I really think they are better than those of many professionals, the portraits are so extremely life-like. Now, this one—Oh, Mr. Johnson, whatever is this?—Dick, and—and an actress: taken yesterday, too! Oh, it can't be my Dick." The poor girl sank into a chair, and it was only Johnson's presence which restrained her from crying.

"By this time Miss Farquhar, being a very self-possessed girl, had quite recovered herself. "Will you be so good as to give me a sheet of note paper and a pen, Mr. Johnson?" she said, coldly.

"Certainly; can I be of any use to you in any other way, Miss Farquhar?" "No, thank you. I merely wish to write Mr. Beaufort a short note," returned the girl.

"I'm afraid she means to give you up, old boy. She said nothing to me about it, though. I should go and see her if I were you; there is evidently some misunderstanding." Johnson knew he was quite safe in saying that much, as he felt sure Dorothy would refuse to see Dick.

"By Jove, I think I will," said Beaufort, slightly cheered by this suggestion; and rushing out of the room, he made his way to Dorothy's house, which was not far distant. Looking at his watch, he found it was still early in the evening, and he felt quite certain of seeing his lady-love and explaining everything there and then.

"The door shut in Dick Beaufort's face and he was left alone on the doorstep; he remained there thunderstruck for a few minutes and then slowly walked on, wondering what on earth could have given rise to Dorothy's unfair accusations. He paying attentions to a woman whose character was, to say the least of it, shady. Was it likely that when he had gained the love of a creature little short of an angel in his estimation, he would be trying to do the same thing with another woman?"

"Johnson, what does this mean?" shouted the young man. "A photograph of me kissing Kitty Hawthorne! Impossible! I never did such a thing in my life." Suddenly his former suspicion, that Johnson was the cause of all this trouble, returned to him.

Justice Marks had a rather heavy wedding ceremony to perform yesterday afternoon, in which the groom weighed 300 pounds, while the bride tipped the scales at 285 pounds. The contracting couple were George Hayes, 45 years of age, and Lettie Kelly, aged 38 years.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

SLEEP.

Too Much Dulls the Intellect and Weakens the Faculties. Sleep insures rest in its highest degree, and rest is necessary for repair, as all action, whether of mind or body, involves destruction, says Chambers' Journal, and without sleep and rest destruction would proceed so much more rapidly than repair that our powers would soon fail altogether, as it is probable that muscular and mental fatigues are due to the waste having outrun repair.

Without these, what is all the morning's wealth! Come, blessed barrier between day and day. Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health.

To much, however, dulls the intellect and weakens the recuperative faculties; while too little prevents the repair of the nervous system. John Wesley says that any one can tell how much sleep he really requires by rising half an hour earlier every morning until he finds he no longer lies awake on going to bed or awakes until it is time for him to get up.

A HUSTLER. A Sad State of Civilization When Money-Making Goes So Far. The boy was not more than two and a half feet high, says the New York Times. But he was intelligent and energetic, and he hawked his newspapers with a zeal that would have been creditable to a high-proof drummer.

"I have been in the newspaper business three years," replied the diminutive merchant, somewhat coldly. "Three years!" exclaimed the man with unfeigned surprise, "why, my lad, you do not look big enough to carry a bundle of papers."

"Notwithstanding," said the mite, with unruffled dignity, "I have been in this business for three years and for two years before I sold papers I was in the clothing business."

"Nine years old," calmly responded the little fellow. "I had to get out and hustle to help support the family when I was four years old. I belong to a family who waste no time."

A Much Married Man. According to a London paper polygamy is practised to an extraordinary degree in Ashantee. The number of wives which a man in private life may have is limited by his ability to purchase and support them, but the number which a King may have is limited by law to the modest number of 3333, and it is said he usually does not exceed that limit.

No Chance for Him. Mr. Colde (to servant)—"I called here yesterday and you told me that your mistress couldn't see me until her pet dog was well. How is he getting on?" Servant—"Miss Puggie told me to tell you if you called again, sir, that the poor, dear, little fellow has the slow consumption.—Puck.

THE CROCODILE. A Few of His Peculiar Ways of Transacting Business. There is little in the animal kingdom that can look so dead and be so much alive as a crocodile, says the Pall Mall Gazette. The number of unsuspecting persons who have mistaken him for a log, and have failed to discover their mistake until it was too late to be of any benefit to them, will never be known.

HISTORIC QUEBEC. Parts of it Suggestive of Scenes in the Old World. From Quebec a correspondent writes to the Paris Messenger: "Tel on parle francais" might be written on the portals of this quaint and picturesque old city. Strolling in lower Quebec, you might easily fancy yourself in Amiens or Dieppe. In the upper town there is more English, but everywhere an amusing mixture. On the same card you will read "Maison a louer," "House to let," "on one side of the door," "Pas d'admission sans affaires" and on the other "No admittance except on business." This bilingual necessity causes a little extra painting and printing. Each railway crossing must be marked likewise, "Traverse de chemin de fer" and every official "notice" must be printed also in full as an "Avis." The blending is often curious, as when two adjoining shops have their announcements one in French and the other in English.

Something to Know. It may be worth something to know that the very best medicine for restoring the tired out nervous system to a healthy vigor is Electric Bitters. This medicine is purely vegetable, acts by giving tone to the nerve centers of the stomach, gently stimulates the liver and kidneys, and aids these organs in throwing off impurities in the blood. Electric Bitters improves the appetite, aids digestion, and is pronounced by those who have tried it as the very best blood purifier and nerve tonic. Try it. Sold for 50 cents or $1 per bottle at P. C. Corrigan's drug store.
