SHORT LINE OFFICIALS HERE.

Sioux City Times, July 18.—The new officers of the Sioux City and Western Railway company, and who also are officials of the Great Northern, returned to Sioux City at 12:30 this afternoon after a flying trip over the line from Sioux City to O'Neill. The party arrived in Sioux City Monday night from St. Paul and left after a stop over of two hours for the night trip to O'Neill. They were accompanied by F. C. Hills, of this city, manager for the Sioux City and Western Railway company, and several sub-officers of the road. The train left O'Neill at 7 o'clock this morning for the return trip. It came slowly so as to give the members of the party an opportunity to look over the line and the country thereabouts.

The train consisted of a supply car and an office car, pulled by a Great Northern mogul engine. The itinerary from St. Paul was by way of Willmar, Garretson and Yankton. From Yankton the run to Sioux City was made over the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul tracks, the train arriving in Sioux City at 8:40 o'clock. In addition to President D. Miller, of the Sioux City and Western, who is also the second vice president of the Great Northern, and Vice President L. W. Hill, who is the son of President James J. Hill and his father's assistant, there were in the party F. B. Clark, general traffic manager for the Great Northern, F. Shesgreen, superintendent of the Willmar division, and J. Q. Adams, of St. Paul, and A. E. D. Thompson, of Duluth, grain men.

"The crops all look fine," said President Miller, who for the first time had been over the line. "We are well satisfied with the line and the conditions surrounding it. Everything in Nebraska seems to be in a prosperous condition, but, of course, we made a hurried trip and could not see much in detail."

L. W. Hill, vice-president of the line, and son of J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, also accompanied the party to O'Neill, and when asked what he thought of the road remarked that it seemed to run to the jumping off place. "But, I must say, all the crops in that part of the country look very fine indeed. Yes, I like the property, and I have no doubt it will do a good business." The young man asked to be excused, and went up town with a friend. The other members of the party loitered about the station and in Manager Hills' office until time for the train to depart.

During the wait of two hours last night the members of the party sat in the lobby of the Mondamin hotel and talked the time away with General Manager Hills and S. J. Beals, receiver of the Sioux City and Northern, who for the last six years has been the Great Northern representative in Sioux City.

As the visitors walked leisurely up town toward the hotel they stopped and looked at the Union passenger station.

"That's one of the things that broke Garretson," said one of the party, as he gave a sweeping gesture which took in the train shed and magnificent pile of granite which soon may be converted into a great warehouse.

Mr. Hills told briefly how the station happened to be built and the story seemed to interest the party.

"Whatever became of the elevated railroad?" asked Mr. Clark, who knew Sioux City better when he was general traffic manager for the Omaha. "I used to be acquainted with Dan Hedges, Garretson, John Peirce and Jim Booge. I'd like to see them now."

"What's the name of this company that succeeded Garretson's trust company?" inquired one of the gentlemen. "Credits Commutation" always had been too much for him. He said he never had been able to throw that name down and hold it.

Mr. Miller, the new president of the Short Line, is a compactly built, middle sized man of 40. He has a well shaped head, covered with closely cropped light hair. His eyes are clear blue and have a merry twinkle which not often is seen in the eyes of a care worn railroad man. His mustache is the color of his hair and in neither is there any suspicion of gray. Mr. Miller might be called a handsome man and it is certain he dresses carefully and in good taste.

"We are making this trip more to learn what we have down here than anything else," he said, pleasantly. "I never was in Sioux City before and never saw a mile of the road of which I am president. I cannot say whether the Sioux City and Western will be extended. Its extension depends upon circumstances. There are many conditions which would influence an extension, but this is too early to talk of them. They have not been considered." Young Mr. Hill, son of the great rail road wizard, is an interesting person. With a gay banded straw hat, loose blue serge coat, colored silk negligee shirt and linen trousers, he had more the appearance of one of the boat club athletes as he lounged up to the counter of the Mondamin than of the assistant of President James J. Hill.

"Yes, thank you, father is home now and came back from Europe feeling fine," he said. He has been talking of coming down this way and I'm going to attempt to persuade him to make the trip while the crops are in such superb condition.

"Really there is nothing to tell about the new road. Nobody knows anything to tell. I have found out more tonight about the Pacific Short Line than I ever knew before, and it all is quite interesting. Mr. Hills said he had kept Col. Clough informed as to the developments in the receivership proceedings and the foreclosure, but I never heard of them, and I don't believe my father did. I know he expressed surprise one morning at breakfast when he read in a paper that he had fallen heir to another railroad."

About 100 O'Neillites accompanied the ball team to Plainview last Friday, and they were all well satisfied with the trip and witnessed two fine games of base ball. The first game was between an aggregation styled Pierce, composed of ball players from Cole-ridge, Sioux City, Pierce, Plainview and one from O'Neill; the other team was from Osmond and they had players from Randolph and O'Neill. The game was an interesting one from start to finish and was not decided until the last man was out. The score stood Pierce 4; Osmond 3. The ball players in both teams are gentlemanly set of fellows and were it not for the big mouth of one of the boosters of the Pierce team, which the owner seemed unable to control, the game would have been better enjoyed by the crowd. The O'Neill team played the winners of the Pierce-Osmond contest and the boys went up against as good an aggregation of ball players as can be procured in the north-eastern part of the state. The O'Neill boys played ball all the time. Owing to the lateness of the hour only five innings were played, the game resulting, O'Neill 3; Pierce 2. O'Neill had the pleasure of securing two runs, while Pierce got none. Arrangements will probably be made to have a game in this city between Pierce and O'Neill in the near future and we can assure our readers that it will be a ball game.
