Studies of Birds.

In order to study birds feeding their young, drinking, bathing and performing other tasks of their every-day life, the photographer and his camera are concealed in an artificial tree trunk or brush head. So efficient are these contrivances that birds will sometimes alight on the top of them, just where they cannot be taken. Water presents at times some almost insurmountable difficulties to the natural history photographer, but pluck and ingenuity die hard, and pictures may often be snatched by an intrepid spirit out of situations that would set a faint-hearted man despairing. It is sometimes necessary to remain for hours in the water with the camera all set, waiting for the birds to return to their position on the rocks.

To Mend Cracks in Walls.

We frequently see broken places in the plastering, where the paper will not stick, and invariably cracks for some reason or another, sometimes from undue heat back of a stove, etc. If a piece of oil-cloth is pasted over such a place, it may then be papered over, and the paper will not crack, no matter how great the heat may be.

Millet's "Angelus."

There are few pictures which have so stirred the heart of humanity as Millet's "Angelus." The girl who supplied the model for the woman's figure was Adele Marier, who constantly reappears in the famous French artist's pictures. It is stated that she retained no resemblance of the man who posed with her. He was a mere "walf and stray," who probably little suspected that his assumed attitude of prayer was to be thus immortalized.

Indian as College Orator.

One of the eight men selected by the Princeton literary societies to participate in the junior oratorical contest to be held commencement week is Howard Edwards Gansworth, a full-blooded Indian. Howard is a son of John Gansworth of Sanborne, N. Y. His father's Indian name is Kho-Whas-Neab. He is a member of the Tuscarora tribe. On his mother's side Howard Gansworth is descended from Red Jacket, chief of the Senecas, who was famous for his oratory and statesmanship.

America's Favorite Spice.

Nutmeg is a favorite American spice and 1,500,000 pounds are annually imported into this country to supply the demand. In Europe the consumption of nutmegs is comparatively little, while many other spices are used twice as much as in this country. The nutmegs are graded according to their size. The best quality of nutmegs runs seventy or eighty to the pound and the next grade averages 100 to 110 to the pound.

Point of Puncture.

A scheme for infallibly detecting the point of puncture in deflated automobile and bicycle tires has been devised. An ammoniacal solution is forced through the valve, and a chemically-prepared white cloth is passed over the outer surface of the tire. When the cloth passes over the puncture the escaping ether of the ammonia causes the cloth to turn blue at that point—and there you are.

SPLIT RAILS WITH LINCOLN.

South Dakota Man Recalls Association with "Honest Abe."

He split rails with Lincoln; that is the one claim old Thomas Thompson, of Lyman county, South Dakota, lays to anything like distinction. But he is immensely proud of that, says the Minneapolis Journal. Thompson's one vote helped make Lincoln president. One episode in particular won him as a voter, if he needed any winning by the friend he had known in a humbly admiring way for years. It was when "Abe" was home from Springfield, where he had become a prominent practicing attorney. Thompson was helping his father and some neighbors to make rails when Lincoln appeared. Old Tom says he "liked Abe on the spot—you could not help it. It did a feller a lot of good to shake hands with him and look into his kind, good-natured face. He gave ye such a hearty grip o' the hand that ye liked it. Some one asked Abe, says he, 'I s'pose ye forgotten how to handle'n axe.' 'Well, let's see,' says Abe, and he picked up an ax. The way he picked it up meant a whole lot, and the way he peeled off his coat and vest meant a whole lot more. First he hefted the ax to get its balance, and then went at a log that was lyin' near. We fellers all stopped to watch him, but he didn't mind. Chuck, chuck, he sent the axe into the log with his long, powerful arms, and with a few licks had that log crackin' and snappin' and splittin' until it lay in halves. Then he quartered it and eighted it and so on without restin' a bit until a clean, nice pile of rails lay where the log had been. Then he quit, sayin': 'Well, boys, I guess I ain't lost the hang o' it yet.' Well, it was such things that made every one like Abe; he wan't stuck up a mite. He was a good man." And there were tears in the old man's eyes when he finished his recital.

HUSBAND TURNS UP

After His Wife Had Collected Life Insurance and Remarried.

Gloucester (Mass.) cor. St. Louis Republic: The appearance here of W. A. Ragland, of Little Rock, Ark., with the news that Howard A. Saville, who disappeared 16 years ago, is still alive, has created a sensation here. Mrs. Saville had collected his life insurance, married again to Benjamin Kinsman, of Gloucester, and separated from her second husband. Saville, who was reported to have died in St. Louis of cancer, is also said to have married again and become the possessor of considerable property. In the meantime the four sons and one daughter of Howard Saville have grown up. One son, Prof. Marshall Saville, of New York, recently made his name famous by his discoveries of rare antiquities in Mexico. Mr. Saville, if living, would be heir to a portion of an estate of the late S. Oliver Brown, and it is to gain information concerning this that Mr. Ragland, according to his statement, is here. He further states that he wishes to establish Mr. Saville's identity in order that the latter may come into some money in a New York bank, to which, it is claimed, he is an heir. Mr. Ragland was identified at the Cape Ann Savings bank as one of the larger brokers in Little Rock. He says that Mr. Saville has been living in or near Little Rock for the past 14 years. Relatives offer an explanation for the possible existence of a legacy in New York, the tale of Mr. Saville's great-grandfather, who was captured by pirates, and, after a long service of slavery, returned to this country to find his wife married again. He then went to South Carolina and accumulated a fortune. The share of the estate to which Howard Saville is entitled will amount to $5,000.

Care of Jewelry.

Jewelry hardly comes in as bric-a-brac, but it often is injured by carelessness in handling and cleaning. Washing and brushing with Jewellers' soap and water is, as a rule, enough, and may be done where stones are clear set. When they are backed with foil, water must not be used or the foil, after having been wet once, will be clouded over and cease to be of any use. Occasionally gold and silver articles become much tarnished from contact with vulcanized rubber, which contains a large proportion of sulphur. Precipitated chalk, carefully sifted through two thicknesses of muslin and mixed with spirit and water, makes an excellent paste in such cases.
