BARTLEY PAROLED

State Journal: Ex State Treasurer J. S. Bartley, serving a twenty years' sentence for embezzling state funds, reposed in his home last night enjoying the comforts of life for the first time in four years that to him have been interminably long. He was paroled by Governor Savage and will remain outside the prison walls so long as his conduct is pleasing to the govenor. The parole was signed by governor without any previous announcement and Mr. Bartley quietly left the penitentiary at 8:30 o'clock in the evening in company with his attorney, Charles O. Whedon, of this city.

The parole was applied for by Mr. Whedon. It is in the usual form, stating that Mr. Whedon will be the employer of the prisoner and look after his interests. In accordance with the terms of the document Mr. Bartley will be required to report monthly to the warden of the penitentiary the number of days he has worked durning the month, the number of days not employed and the reason therefor, the amount of money earned and how expended. His employer must verify this report.

The crime for which Mr. Bartley was convicted was the embezzlement of the proceedes of a state warrant for $201, 000. His shortage was alleged to be over $500,000, but the particular court on which he was convicted was the embezzlement of the proceeds of one warrant which was cashed at the Omaha National bank. The suit of the state to recovers this amount from the bank is now pendingin the supreme court, where it now is for the third time.

At his home last night Mr. Bartley appeared to be full of courage for the life before him. He declined to state what pursuit he would follow, but said he had his work mapped out befor him. He was loath to discuss his future prospects, but finally did speak with earnestness of his past and future.

"I have never yet run up the white flag," he said "and I am not going to do so now. What I have suffered the past four years is passed and no good can come of speaking of it. But I say with emphasis that I never did anything that made me ashamed to face any one, and my future conduct will speak for itself. You may say that I expect to remain in Nebraska and make my home here," Judge Ben S. Baker of Omaha, then judge of the district court of Douglas county, sentenced Bartley. The crime charged was made a political issue and judge and jury and political parties have not escaped criticism as a result. What suffering the prisoner has undergone he alone knows. The strife of more or less bitterness has continued since the incarceration, and the question of issuing a pardon has been used by politicians from time to time to influence elections. Governor Poynter, who retired from office the first of the year, is said to have promised to issue pardon.

Bartley was elected as a republican

The Juige who sentenced Bartley was charged by Bartley's friends with s everity. As time passed much of the bitterness of the contention as to whether Bartley alone was guilty or whether he was suffering for the work of others, or whether his sentence was too severe, grew less animated except in a small circle of friends who never left off working for his release or for some softening of the sentence.

At first a petition for an unconditional pardon was circulated. The very mention of it brought froth a storm of portest and no governor dared to sign it. The matter was dropped so far as the public knew, but friends kept at work on the case, resulting in the parole of Bartley. This will enable him to care for his family and engage in business pursuits for which he is fitted.

Mr. Bartley has been in the penitentiary four years and one month. At the time of his imprisonment his eyes were much affected and he was unable to perform hard manual labor on account of his general health. He was given the lighter employment, and for one or two years has been caring for the hot house and the flowers. In this work he succeeded Ben Mills, who was later paroled only to sink into the grave.

It is a curious fact that although Missouri elected its first governor more than eighty years ago, is one of the largest and most prosperous states of the country, and that from its geographical positon on the border line between North and South, has occupied an important position in national affairs, not one of its governors has ever been conspicuous in national politics, with the single exception of B.
