THE FRONTIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY BY THE FRONTIER PRINTING COMPANY D. H. CRONIN, EDITOR.

There are many things congress shouldn't do, but about the worst thing it could do is to monkey with the tariff.

The Atkinson Graphic came to our table last week looking familiar. The Plain Dealer was sold to A. M. Church of the Naper News, who effected the change in name. Holt county had an Atkinson Graphic for many years and the revival of the name seems like the return of an old friend. With the change of name came a change of politics. The Graphic will be republican. Mr. Church is a good newspaper man is not a stranger to Holt county as he published the Stuart Ledger previous to going to Naper, and The Frontier extends welcome upon his return.

An eastern gentleman is interesting himself in the laudable enterprise of founding a community for the purpose of bring out a better grade of men and women in the three-fold sense of physical, moral and intellectual. His idea is the interest philantrophists and have them endow likely young couples with sufficient means to enable them to carry out a mode of life which will be most conducive to these higher attainments. Marriage and rearing of children is to be encouraged and each succeeding generation is hoped to be an improvement over the last. In other words, a system of "breeding up" as stock raisers have adopted. Its a good work, and it should not be confined to any community, but be a part of every body's purpose in life.

The president's message-may you have got through reading itwas a surprise to his friends and a body-blow to his enemies. Unlike the rash and daring adventures that characterized the president's military career, his message is clear, candid and temperate in the discussion of national questions, with no symptems of a desire to avoid any. His counsel to avoid the obstruction of the onward murch of commerce by unnecessiarily hampering men of large business activity, whose success means so much to each individual, is well given. There is a growing confidence in the ability of the president to administer the high office to which he has accidently been called, in an able and satisfactory way, and this, with the belief that congress will do nothing to disturb commercial interests in a sense to destroy pros perity, assures the public that every encouragement will be given by the government to the ligitimate expansion of business.

Fremont Tribune: The semiannual report of State Auditor Weston, just given to the public. shows the state to have a debt exceeding by a trifle the large sum of $2,000,000. It also discloses the fact that the debt is gradually grow ing at the uniform rate of $100,000 a year. It is precisely for this reason, which the auditor's report emphasizes, that the Tribune has opposed the expenditure of a large sum of money for making an exhibit at the St. Louis exposition. It is time the state was taking more interest in getting out of debt and less in getting in. There are necessities that must be provided. These absord the whole power of the state to pay, and more. It is folly and recklessness to drift along and add fect, extinguishes every resentment; to the burden by frequent and large from its peaceful bosom spring none expenditures for mere show. The prudent man who is heavily involved will stay away from fashionable elements so mixed in him, that functions where his old serviceable nature might stand up and say to clothes cannot be worn. He will all the world, This was a man." not invest in fineries and flummeries while unable to meet his notes and interest. The state should exercise a little of the same sort of common | honor, and the uprightness of character, sense for a while. Resolutions of Respect.

ous dispensation of Providence, the grim messenger has again invaded our ranks, claimed another member of our fraternity, and desolated a home by the removal from our midst of fellow citizen, friend and brother, County Judge Clarence Selah; with becoming gravity and solemnity, we lay upon the alter, such tribute of affection, and such proof of our commendation, as the virtues of the departed demand at our hands; and while we may not perhaps properly, at this time, eulogize, or weave garlands of praise for the fallen, nor throw the incense of adulation upon his bier, or the urn which shall enclose his ashes, yet in a review of a life though short, vet full of good works, the mere recital of facts must necessarily bear the semblance of culogium; and, while we thus pay the offices of respect and affection to our departed brother, being by his early demise again reminded that, 'Men drop so fast ere life's mid-stage we tread, Few know so many friends alive as dead," we may profitably draw from the visitation which has stricken him down, such lessons as are calculated to teach us what shadows are, and what shadows we are, and what shadows we

Vigor and constancy of good conduct, equality of temper, serenity of his aspect, his contempt of fame, the generous ambition he had to be perfectly master of himself and of his business, were among his characteristics and traits of character.

Nothing that he laid hold of was dismissed till he had looked it through and viewed it on all sides; never in so much of a hurry as to slight the matter engaging his attention. He was a judge of men and manners, but not of a reprimanding disposition, not easily swerved or frightened from the path of duty as he saw it, not over suspicious, not a sophist; his disposition was patient, in his friendship, steady, and agreeable in his manner of showing it. Entertaining strong convictions and pronounced views on all questions presented for his consideration, with the courage of his convictions he expressed his views freely and courteously, and while ever ready and spirited, and on occasion his pen dripping with caustic sarcasm and keen retort, yet in a face to face oral encounter, while alert in every fiber, and prompt in vindication, he would not permit the rancorous animosities of politics to disturb his equanimity, nor would he voluntarily resort, or permit himself to be driven to the alternative of a morbid mind-the easy but unprofitable contest of retaliating in kind or retorting sarcasm and inspiring prejudice, which would only double the evil instead of redressing the wrong; and though perhaps sometimes moved to excasable indignation, would not be fretted into pestulance, but always accorded to his opponent all freedom to contradict him and was pleased with the proposal steady. of a better expedient than his own. With broad and liberal views, and a wide range of classified knowledg, he loved the solitude of the student rather than the gilded palace, and the arts of peace rather than the glory of war. In his official capacity, upright, and without fear, favor or prejudice, holding the scale of justice in equal poise, he gave to every man his just due as he saw it, without distinction. Generous to a fault, he was one to whom the burdened heart might pour prefer its suit, whose hand was guided by justice and whose heart was expanded by benevolence, regarding his neighbor as being entitled with himself. to share the blessings of providence, and rendering unto him such favors and friendly offices, as, in the same situation he would expect to receive from him: in the state, a peaceable and loyalty or rebellion, but patiently submitting to the magisteral authority of the land in which he lived, and conforming with cheerfulness to the government to whose laws himself looked for protection.

We speak of him as we knew him in daily contact, and under all the varied circumstances and phases of life, and realize that the grave is the ordeal of true affection, it is there that the divine passion of the soul manifests its superiority to the instinctive impulse of mere animal attachment which must be If the Northern takes hold of this procontinually kept alive by the presence of its object, but the love that is seated in the soul can live on long remembrance.

Sorrow for the dead is the only sorrow from which we refuse to be divorced: every other wound we seek to heal, every other affliction to forget, but this wound we consider it a duty to keep open, this affliction we cherish and brood over in solitude. The grave buries every error and covers every debut fond regiets and tender recollections. Of the departed it may be truthfully said, "His life was gentle, and the

> And resolved, further, that while we regretfully consign the remains of our brother to the elements from which it came, we also commend the relatives to the compassion and clemency of the great Judge whose decisions are without error and final, and who notes even the fall of a sparrow.

> Resolved, that these resolutions be spread at length upon the journal of the district court of Holt county, a copy presented to the surviving companion and son, and a copy furnished to each of the city papers for publication.

There is a good deal of railroad talk indulged in just now by newspaper men of Holt and Boyd counties. A variety of schemes are being discussed with the same general object in view of giving out its sorrows, to whom distress might the territory north of the Eikhorn better railroad accomodations. While the building of railroads is generally preceded by more or less agitation, it is very risky business to plan commercial affairs on the railroad theory until you hear the toot of the engine. WEEKS trial subscript'n IOC Twentieth Century Farmer It contains a number of special articles each week by the most competent specialists in every branch of agriculture; departments devoted to live stock, crops, the dairy, poulty yard, the orchard and garpen, farm machinery, veterinary topics, irrigation and the markets.

The farmer's wife, too, has her share of space, with recipes and suggestions on cookery, dressmaking, fancy work, care of flewers and matters particularly pleasing to her, while the children have a department edited for them exclusively. Four or five pages are devoted to a complete review of the news of the week, covering happenings at home and abroad, and news in particular interesting to the great farming west. Then, too, are the stories, choice poetry and humor and all the good things that one likes to read after the lamps are lighted and the day's work is done.
