The supervisors of Holt and Boyd counties are not the only ones who have a perpetual batch of "troubles on their hands" with Niobrara river bridges, as this from the last issue of the Rock County Leader discloses: the county commissioners convened Tuesday and are still in session. The condition of the bridges along the Niobrara made it necessary that a joint meeting be held today at the Carns bridge. The river has been very high this spring and the ice and water have caused havoc. Two spans of the McCulley bridge were taken up to save it from being washed away. Two or three piling were knocked out from the Carns bridge but so far Hogan's bridge is intact. The McLain bridge
