Relief From Rheumatic Pains.

"I suffered with rheumatism for over two years," says Mr. Rolland Curry, a patrolman, of Key West, Fla. "Sometimes it settled in my knees and lamed me so I could hardly walk, at other times it would be in my feet and hands so I was incapacitated for duty. One night when I was in severe pain and lame from it my wife went to the drug store and came back with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I was rubbed with it and found the pain had nearly gone during the night. I kept on using it for a little more than two weeks and found that it drove the rheumatism away. I have not had any trouble from that disease for over three months. For sale by Gilligan & Stout.

The following notice of the death of Mrs. Mary Steele, formerly Miss Mary O'Neill, daughter of Gen. John O'Neill and for several years a resident of this city, is taken from the Spaulding Enterprise: "Death loves a shining mark." This adage has been brought home to the people of this community with indelibly imprinted force within the past week. The sudden and unexpected death of Mrs. Mary Steele on last Monday has brought gloom and sorrow into the home of nearly every resident of this community. Her calling had taken her into the residences of a great many families, where her kindness and cheerful temperament had left an abiding and lasting impression. It is no easy matter to write properly the words that give an account to the world of the death of any person, and we recognize this attempt to reflect the sentiment of this community at the death of Mrs. Steele. She was a woman who had braved the storms and trials of this world with a brave and cheerful heart. Along the pathway of human life poetical sentiment and scientific application has strewn no flowers for a great many of the human race. The rocks and boulders are ever in evidence and all in all he seems to be the happiest who is compelled to overcome them. Mrs. Steele was left in early life the widowed mother of two boys, one of whom demanded the attention of skillful practitioners, and these boys have at all times received the best that the world affords. That it required painstaking and indefatigable industry on the part of the mother to provide these things everybody knows, and this indeed is her best eulogy. If every person in whom her patience and exemplary courage has created a deep and lasting admiration would come to pay their tribute of respect she would sleep beneath a tomb of roses. Her illness had lasted but a short time and it was not until a short time before her death that it was recognized as dangerous. For this reason only one of her boys and a sister were present at her death. Her brother, J. H. O'Neill, of San Diego, California, left on Tuesday for this place and will be present at the funeral, which will take place next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from St. Michael's church. She died at the home of August Fritz, where she had made her place of residence for some time. The deceased was the widow of Lincoln Steele, an attorney at David City, whom she married at Spaulding, and who died a few years ago. She was the daughter of Gen. John O'Neill whose name became famous for his efforts in behalf of the people of Ireland. She has resided in Spaulding a number of years and her early death is universally mourned. She leaves two boys, a brother and three sisters, all of whom have the sympathy of the entire community."

STUART
The damage suit instituted by one Rosa Hudspeth against Wm. Krotter, which was to be tried here today, was postponed for two weeks by request of defendant.

A letter received from John Sturdevant, now in Buffalo, Wyo., would indicate that he is not very favorably impressed with the appearance of that country.

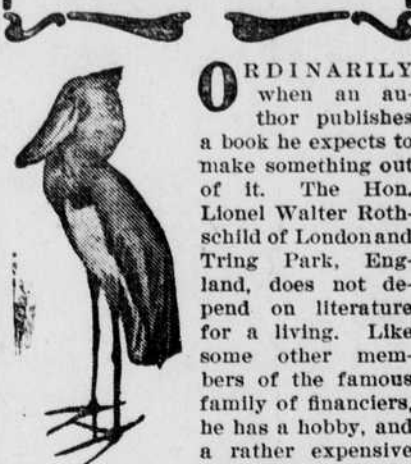

Rev. Glassner and wife were in Stuart Friday, visiting friends. They have sold their property in Long Pine and bought a residence in Schuyler, where they will make their future home. Mr. Glassner is in poor health and not now actively engaged in ministerial work.

Harry Shank returned Sunday evening from Mutual, Ohio, where he had gone to attend the funeral of his sister's husband, a Mr. Rupert. Mr. Shank says that the industrial conditions there are now on a boom. He has a nephew in the lumber business in Dayton, Ohio, who, in speaking of the business situation there, said it was not a question of selling goods, but of getting what was needed to meet the demand, and to illustrate he stated that last year their business was about three hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the whole year, while this year they have already done that much business and the year is not half gone. Labor is bringing better wages than ever before in the history of the state. The wave of prosperity is as long and as wide as the land that the stars and the stripes wave over.—Advocate.

Expensive Hobby of a Rothschild.

WHALE HEADED STORK.

ORDINARILY when an author publishes a book he expects to make something out of it. The Hon. Lionel Walter Rothschild of London and Tring Park, England, does not depend on literature for a living. Like some other members of the famous family of financiers, he has a hobby, and a rather expensive one at that. In the collection of rare animals and insects and in publications about them he has spent what to many would seem a very comfortable fortune. His zoological museum at Tring Park is perhaps the largest private museum of the kind in existence. He edits reports on the collections of this museum which cost him a great deal, but he is now engaged in the publication of a book about "Extinct Birds" which as a sort of literary and scientific luxury promises to beat the record. This work is said to have cost the author about $100,000, and only 300 copies of it will be issued. These will be printed in English and sold at $125 a copy. Thus, even if he sold all of the books at the price named, he would be a loser to the extent of over $60,000.

But $60,000 is nothing to the eldest son of Baron Rothschild. He spends about as much as that every year in keeping up his wonderful zoological gardens and museum. He has fitted out expeditions to go hunting in the tropics for rare animals, paying high prices where necessary to obtain them and buying out whole collections sometimes just to obtain one extraordinary specimen. His younger brother Charles, whose hobby is the collection of fleas, once commissioned some arctic whalers to obtain for him specimens of the fleas of arctic animals, and there was a story that Charles had offered a prize of $5,000 for a single example of the flea of the arctic fox. This was denied, but it was not denied that he had made special inducements to the arctic fishermen to find for him specimens of insects from the polar regions. Charles Rothschild has manifested strange devotion to his singular hobby. He says that every mammal and bird has a particular kind of flea and that some of them have several kinds, so that the flea affords more diverse material for a collector than any living creature. He has fleas from every corner of the world, over 10,000 different varieties. It affords him as great delight to secure a new kind of flea as it does J. Pierpont Morgan to obtain a rare specimen of the work of an old master.

In the publication of the work on extinct birds great care has been taken to render it so far as possible imperishable. The most expensive paper is used, and the blocks for the color plates cost over a thousand pounds. Among the birds now extinct, or practically so, of which the book has illustrations are the great auk, the whale headed stork, the King Albert's bird of paradise from New Guinea, the Labrador duck and Mantell's kiwi.

The Hon. Lionel Walter Rothschild, though thirty-eight years of age and though occupied with business cares and his duties as a member of parliament, has attained reputation as a scientist. The study of animals and insects and their collection are with him no mere hobby, and he has written several works on natural history which have been accepted as authorities in their field. He was one of the first Englishmen to employ the zebra for driving and farm purposes. He started the staid British public a few years ago by driving zebras four abreast through the streets of London. His collections embrace a wide variety of specimens belonging to the animal kingdom, living and dead, but perhaps he takes the greatest interest in birds. Among stuffed specimens of the latter in his museum at Tring Park is an example of the great auk, with two eggs, bird and eggs together being valued at about $1,700. Another rare and extinct bird in the museum is the grotesque whale headed stork from the White Nile.

MARY BAKER GLOVER.

Granddaughter of the Venerable Founder of Christian Science.

It is rather a peculiar position in which a pretty western girl, Miss Mary Baker Glover of Lead City, S. D., finds herself. She is a granddaughter of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, founder of Christian Science, and with her father and a nephew of Mrs. Eddy has brought suit for an accounting of the property of her grandmother, basing this action on the allegation that the famous author of "Science and Health" is incompetent to manage her affairs. She was with her father when he visited his mother at Concord, N. H., just previous to the bringing of the suit. Mrs. Eddy at that time showed solicitude that her granddaughter should be well instructed in the tenets of Christian Science. Miss Glover is not a Christian Scientist, however. Her father was at one time, but recently has not been counted among the adherents of the sect. Miss Glover has a bright and pleasing face, and her mouth is expressive of shrewdness. She has been familiar with mining camps and the hardships of life in such regions since childhood, as her father is a mine prospector and promoter and the inventor of a divining rod which he claims to be of value in the location of mineral wealth. He is Mrs. Eddy's only son, but was separated from his mother for many years. She gave him up at four years of age when she was a young widow because she could not care for him, lost track of him and for a long time supposed him dead.

TEDDY JUNIOR AT HARVARD.

How the President's Son Won a Much Coveted Post.

President Roosevelt's eldest son, Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., is often annoyed by having to be so much in the public eye while pursuing his course at Harvard university. His position as a student is rather a trying one in view of the publicity thrust upon him by reason of his father's high station, but he is considered to have shown good sense in the main and is popular with his fellow students. This is shown in the fact that he was recently chosen assistant manager of the varsity crew. A student who wins this post has to earn the appointment. Young Roosevelt could not have obtained it simply on the ground of being the president's son.

There were quite a number of candidates for the position, and all were assigned to the task of soliciting subscriptions for the support of rowing. When Teddy Junior started to ask for subscriptions he got a good deal of "joshing" from fellow students, but kept at it until he had raised $600, which was $100 more than any other student raised. The contest then narrowed down to four candidates, and they were required to do odd jobs about the boathouse, such as filling the tank and running errands for members of the crew. Not even this feat of the president's son, and he finally won the appointment. In the natural course of events he will become manager of the crew in his senior year, and this is a position which carries with it much social prestige.
