The "Stoughton Bottle."

From the Boston Globe.

Stoughton, not stoatin, bottle is proper. The adage, "standing like a stoughton bottle," can be traced back to early 19th century days. Dr. Stoughton in those times got out a bitters that became famous. The compound was originally sold in ordinary straight green (probably black) bottles, duly labeled, and the Stoughton bitters bottle became a bar fixture, always standing at the end of the bar. The contents of the bottle seem to have been gin-steeped tansy to give the unblended whisky of those times a tang. The adage rose from the noticeable position of the bottle on the bar.

"Eczema appeared on my son's face. We went to a doctor, who treated him for three months. Then he was so bad that his face and head were nothing but one sore and his ears looked as if they were going to fall off, so we tried another doctor for four months, the baby never getting any better. His hand and legs had big sores on them and the poor little fellow suffered so terribly that he could not sleep. After he had suffered six months we tried a set of the Cuticura Remedies and the first treatment let him sleep and rest well; in one week the sores were gone and in two months he had a clear face. Now he is two years and has never had eczema again. Mrs. Louis Beck, R. F. D. 3, San Antonio, Tex., April 15, 1907."

The Wants of the Army.

The Duke of Connaught is telling an amusing story of his recent visit of inspection to Egypt. While he was in Cairo, he went for a stroll one morning and on his way back to his quarters he came face to face with an old Englishman wearing the ribbon of the Indian Mutiny on his breast. The duke stopped and spoke to the man about his military service for some little time. Presently, the man said, not knowing, of course, to whom he was speaking: "Are you in the army, then, yourself, sir?" The duke smiled and admitted that he was. "Getting on all right?" was the next question. The duke smiled again and said that he had not very much to grumble at on the whole, though perhaps he was not doing quite so well as he could wish. "No, and you never will, my boy," was the surprising retort of the veteran. "What you want in the army today is either brains or a tremendous amount of influence behind you. Those who are still young and robust are likely to overlook the fact that, as dropping water will wear a stone away at last, so will the use of heavy, greasy, rich food, finally cause loss of appetite and indigestion.

Fortunately many are thoughtful enough to study themselves and note the principle of Cause and Effect in their daily food. A N. Y. young woman writes her experience thus:

"Some time ago I had a lot of trouble from indigestion, caused by too rich food. I got so I was unable to digest scarcely anything, and medicines seemed useless.

"A friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food, praising it highly, and as a last resort, I tried it. I am thankful to say that Grape-Nuts not only relieved me of my trouble, but built me up and strengthened my digestive organs, so that I can now eat anything I desire. But I stick to Grape-Nuts."

New Artificial Fertilizer. From the Consular and Trade Reports.
Consul W. H. H. Webster, of Niagara Falls, Ontario, makes the following report on the establishment of a factory for the manufacture of cyanamide and lime nitrogen:

One of the many industries in this growing city is the manufacture of cyanamide. Coke and lime are used in the manufacture of cyanamide by means of an electric furnace, the remeans of an electric furnace, the resulting compound being in turn pulverized and combined in a second electric furnace with nitrogen from the air secured by a liquid air process. The materials thus obtained contain 20 per cent in weight of nitrogen, the balance being the coke and lime compound which serves to bind the nitrogen. This compound is calcium cyanamide or lime nitrogen, and when sown in or lime nitrogen, and when sown in the soil it decomposes and dissolves in contact with the soil moisture, is then absorbed through the roots of then absorbed through the roots of the plants and becomes a valuable constituent. Three years of actual use up-on farms in Europe has proved the 'value of this substance in connection with the wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, rice, tobacco and other crops. Some crops have been doubled by its use.

Saving Waste.

"Allowing nothing to go to waste that can be turned into money," is the spirit of the commercialism that now rules industrial. the commercialism that now rules industrial America. It is the inspiration that is stimulating scientific research, mechanical invention and money-hungry human endeavor in every field. "We market every part of the hog except the squeal," said the late P. D. Armour to a visitor he was showing about his pork packing establishment, and that, be it noted, was before the day of the phonograph. Mr. Armour was an early starter.

A distinct impetus was given the utiliza-tion of material long allowed to go to waste, by enforcement of laws for the pro-tection of communities against nuisances. It was the force of public opinion that first compelled the pork packers to invent pro-cesses for the conversion of the intolerable refuse of their great abattoirs into fer-tilizers and the many other by-products now yielding fat profits, and to create a market for them.

The same is true of the great oil re fineries of the Standard and other com-panies in the petroleum industries. By-products, numbering several hundred in all, are the largest profit-makers of the Standard. The premier refining company of the world owes a very consi centage of its enormous wealth to the re-fusal of the keen smelling public to dwell without protest in the noxious atmosphere of the old-time refinery.

"'What, has old Koopon, the banker, made you an offer?' Mr. Pastor cried, "'Yes,' said I, 'and a very generous one, too; but I prefer this office to his.'

"'And in this office you shall stay,' said Mr. Pastor, whimstcally. 'We'll make room for you somehow. Why, my dear child, all my money is in Koopon's bank.'"

There Is a Perpetual Feud Between Different Species.

"On the morning of August 11," says a writer in Surburban Life, "I gathered a few black ants and a number of their small, brown, egg shaped cocoons from an ant hill in my yard and placed them in a shallow glass box, an artificial nest, where I watched their behavior.

"Strange how ants recognize both friends and enemies through the sense of smell rather than by the sense of sight. "This was the case when the ant with in order a worker ant approached her and after a short antenna conversation began to tug at her wings. Apparently this was to give the royal sister to understand that she must now discard them and asume the responsibilities of egg laying, the work for which she had been most carefully reared.

"The young queen was not inclined to give up her gauzy appendages, however, so presently the worker resumed her efforts to loosen them, but with no show of animosity. Failing to accomplish her purpose, she next caught the queen by her antennae and led her gently about the nest and then held her in a corner for at least twenty minutes.

"During this time the other ants came and touched her caressingly with their antennae, and one went so far as to offer her food from its mouth. It was a clear her food from its mouth. It was a clear case of coaxing. They wanted this queen mother to deposit eggs and found a new colony. I do not know what arguments finally overcame the queen's reluctance to give up her freedom. The next day I saw that she had yielded to the entreaties of her sisters. She was wingless and depositing very minute eggs. "The black ants have what appear to be good natured wrestling matches among themselves. They are constantly on the move doing something, carrying the un-wieldly cocoons from one place to another, regurgitating for a companion or making elaborate toilets."
