WINGS THAT WERE FINS.

Evidence That Penguin's Pinions Were Once Used For Swimming.
Ornithological puzzles are the penguins, with their curiously shaped wings and odd, unbirdlike, upright carriage. The peculiarities of their wings suggest that the penguins are descendants of birds which used their wings rather than legs in the pursuit of prey under water, and as the struggle intensified between the competing individuals the most expert at this sort of swimming would get the most food and out less successful rivals. The winners gained advantage over their neighbors in proportion as their wings improved as swimming organs and inversely and of necessity became less suited to perform the work of flight.
In all other birds the feathers, though shed annually, are more or less gradually displaced. But in the penguins the new feathers all start into being at the same time and thrust out the old feathers upon their tips so that these come away in great flakes. Whereas in all birds save penguins the new feathers as they thrust their way through the skin end in pencil-like points, formed by investing sheaths. In the penguins these sheaths are open at the tips and attached by their rims to the roots of the old feathers, and hence these are held to their successors until they have attained a sufficient length to insure protection against cold.
The curious device for retaining the warmth afforded by the old feathers until the new generation can fill their places is apparently due to the fact that penguins are natives of the antarctic regions, although some now inhabit tropical seas.—Chicago Tribune.

Short and to the Point
A coal merchant who was a man of few words once wrote to an agent the following brief letter:
Dear Jones—" "
In due time the agent's reply came as follows:
Dear Mr. Sinclair—" "
The coal dealer's letter, translated, said, "See my coal on," which is the semicolon expressed verbally.
The agent informed the dealer that the coal was shipped by saying simply, "Col-on."—Scrap Book.
