

SAY NEIGHBOR!

Don't you think that it would be a wise IDEA to have your coal bin filled up with some of that CHOICE SCRANTON HARD COAL, that is just the right size for that furnace or hard coal burner, or if you don't burn hard coal some of that ZIPP COAL for the soft coal burner or range.

Don't-Cher-Know that Hard Coal is Going to be Scarcer this Winter Than Hen's Teeth and Higher than a Cat's Back.

Think it over and while you are thinking about it just grab your telephone and tell central that you want No. 32, the place that sell that good kind of coal that is guaranteed to give satisfaction. Phone 32.

THE RED AND THE GREEN

A Story of Domestic Love and Squabbles

By EDMOND L. STANLEY

When Bob and Carrie Delafield were married they went, on returning from their wedding trip, to their own house, which was very large, containing several separate suits of rooms. Both had their ideas of decoration, and, having disputed over the colors for the interior of their bedrooms, they finally concluded that the bride should direct the decoration of one suit, while the groom should select the colors for another. The first suit was to be the bride's rooms, the second the groom's. Mrs. Delafield—that was to be—chose for her apartments a very beautiful shade of green. Bob Delafield, who had no artistic taste whatever, but thought himself a connoisseur, especially in colors, put his suit in red. It wasn't even one of those rich reds which, when put in the right place, are often very attractive.

"By Jove! That's elaborate!" said Bob when he saw his decorations complete. "And appropriate," added his wife, smiling, "for a member of the fire department."

Since a bride and groom don't care to occupy separate apartments the couple agreed that they would use the two suits on alternate weeks. They tossed a coin for the first choice, and Bob won. So upon their return from their wedding journey they occupied the red suit.

Now, it happened the day after their arrival that Bob accidentally knocked a cut glass pitcher—a wedding gift especially cherished by the bride—off a table and smashed it.

"Dear!" exclaimed his wife in a tone of anger. "What abominable carelessness! I would rather have had you break anything in the house than that pitcher. It was Mollie's gift."

"Do you suppose I intended to break it?" replied the husband, with a fierce inflection on the word intended. "Get away!"

Both had started to pick up the fragments, but at this order of his bride Bob desisted and left the room, slamming the door behind him.

Bob was so infatuated with what he called the old rose color of his suit that he had induced his wife to order their dinner there that same day. The pitcher was broken at noon. Carrie sulked all the afternoon, and when dinner was served her eyes were red, while on her face was the expression of an injured woman. Only monosyllables were spoken at dinner by either.

This is a sample of what frequently occurred during that first supposed to be happy week at home after the honeymoon.

On the beginning of the second week they removed to the bride's suit, each secretly vowing that should the scrappy condition continue—and they expected it would—they must have a rest by temporarily separating.

It was Sunday morning when they first awoke in their new quarters. A bit of sunlight had stolen in through the window, faintly illuminating the room. It seemed to Carrie that she had been sleeping under the rustling leaves of a tree and had awakened to look upon a meadow robed in the verdure of the lovely month of June.

It at once occurred to her that she had been very disagreeable to her husband, and she was heartily sorry for it.

"Oh, Bob," she said, "what a horrid creature I have been for the whole of this first week of our homecoming!"

"You mean that I have been positively brutal."

"Well, never mind whose fault it has been. We won't do so any more."

"By Jove, sweetheart, I believe I like the decoration of your suit better than mine, after all."

"Yours is very beautiful."

"How lovely it is of you to say so! You said when you first saw it that it was appropriate for a fireman."

tired from having traveled so long. Besides, that hotel food upset us both." Now, the husband who had occasionally played poker with his friends was a great believer in luck. He considered that they were having a fine run of luck in the green suit and was very much opposed to the change. But Carrie was bound to give up to her husband in the matter, and when a wife makes up her mind to do that nothing can stop her. Bob used every argument to induce her to consent to remain in her rooms, but failed. When he found there was no use to struggle with her any longer he gave in.

Sunday morning Bob dreamed that he was in hell. About him was a lurid light covering all the firmament. Satan came to him and asked him why he didn't go to work at the furnaces, and when he said he was tired and didn't wish to work the arch fiend poked him with his pitchfork and woke him up. The lurid glare of hades dissolved into a lurid glare in his bedroom. A window shade had been left up, and the sunlight was pouring in, illuminating the red decorations. Then Carrie awoke and, sitting up in bed, shaded her eyes with her hands.

"What an awful glare!" she exclaimed. "I thought you lowered that shade last night. I told you to do so."

"I don't remember your telling me any such thing."

"I certainly did."

"You didn't."

"I did."

"What's the matter with you this morning?"

"Nothing."

"You're cross as a bear."

"First cast the beam out of your own eye and you will see clear to cast the mote out of mine."

"I always heard the devil is good at quoting Scripture."

He turned over, with a grunt, and tried to go to sleep again, but the glare in the room prevented. The wife lay thinking. Where was the loveliness of the just happy week? Their expectations of a renewal were disappointed on awaking the first morning. Bob tossed about for awhile, then got up and took his bath.

"Where the devil is the warm water this morning?" he yelled from the bathroom.

"Didn't I tell you yesterday that the range fire had gone out?"

"What did you let it go out for? Do you suppose a man wants to bathe in ice water, especially on Sunday morning?"

"Oh, shut up! You'll drive me crazy." Bob slammed the bathroom door. Presently he came out with a razor in his hand and blood on his chin.

"Cut yourself, dear?" asked his wife. "Oh, don't 'dear' me. Get me some court plaster quick."

She went to the medicine closet for the court plaster, but since she couldn't find it at once he hurled maledictions upon her. Finally she threw the court plaster at him, went to her own suit and shut the door. Bob didn't expect to see her again for hours. He was agreeably disappointed. In half an hour she came out, with an angelic smile on her face, and said:

"Don't you think I'd better have the breakfast served in my room instead of yours, dear?"

"No, I don't. You can have yours served there if you like. I'm going to eat mine in my own rooms."

"All right, dear. Did you cut yourself badly?"

"Little you care whether I did or not."

Carrie after fixing Bob's coffee handed it to him and let go of it before he had got a hold on it. The consequence was that cup and saucer fell to the table, the cup was broken and the coffee soused over the white linen tablecloth.

Bob burst forth into a torrent of profanity, and Carrie, with flashing eyes, left the table.

One hour later Bob, realizing that the blessed day of rest that came but once a week was likely to pass in misery, went to his wife's room to try for a reconciliation. She was sitting at a table writing some letters. It seemed to him that she had left him in hell and he had followed her to the garden of Eden. There was something delightfully verdant about the apartment. Carrie looked up at him lovingly. He bent down and kissed her.

"What the deuce were we squabbling about anyway?" he asked.

"I don't know, dear."
