Literature in Turkey has responded to the liberty that followed the revolution. Large numbers of translations and adaptations of European scientific and literary works and books of a popular nature are now available. Textbooks for use in Turkish schools are prepared to meet the needs of a modernized curriculum. Standard works of European literature are being translated into Turkish, and modern popular novels, principally French, have a large sale. American detective stories are finding great favor among Turkish youth. There is also a growing modern Turkish literature which aims to foster Turkish patriotism and love for the language.

Rare books to the value of nearly $1,000,000 changed hands during the last year. Those in great demand seem to be works printed by old craftsmen. A new feature of an English periodical, however, called "The Bargain Column," is visible evidence of interest in a very different sort of article. It records the luck of a visitor to a Suffolk inn, who found that a glass on the washstand was a Jacobite drinking glass, with a portrait of the pretender engraved on it. Such a glass has brought as much as $500. And who will say that the motive of its collector was in any degree lower than that of many a seeker of rare editions?—New York Evening Post.

There is in experimental use on a Swedish railroad a car holding 40 passengers run by a combination of electricity and oil. The electrical equipment is driven by a Deisel engine, consuming crude oil and is said to show as high efficiency as gasoline engines. The railroad line is a short section of 25 miles, and a good speed of 45 miles an hour is obtained. As usual, the engine drives a dynamo, so as to give current for the car motors. The fuel consumption is 22 pounds of oil, against five-tenths to one ton of coal for a steam locomotive, and a small amount of water is used.

PRINCE LITTLE CONCERNED

OVER SENTENCE TO DEATH Lincoln. Neb., Nov. 30.—Albert Prince, the convict whom the supreme court says must die on March 21, apparently cares very little whether he lives. When Warden Melick conveyed the news to him yesterday he acted as unconcerned as though that official had told him what he was to have for his next meal. He said he had no comments to make. Ever since his conviction he has seemingly held to himself no hope of any other end than on the scaffold, and has devoted his leisure time to reading the Bible and some of OVER SENTENCE TO DEATH time to reading the Bible and some of the better class of books from the prison library. Long-Delayed Franco-English Project Is Once More Being Put Forward.

A tunnel between England and France beneath the English channel was first proposed at the beginning of the nineteenth century by Mathieu. a French mining engineer, says the Argonaut. Fifty years later the scheme was financed, but it was not until 1867 that it seemed that the project would be actually attempted. At that time there were a dozen or more plans for rail communication between the two countries. The accepted scheme was that of a tunnel bored beneath the bed of the channel. The estimated cost of the undertaking was about £10,000,000. Preliminary boring had been made, when the work was interrupted by the Franco-Prussian war. In 1874 the French and English governments resumed negotiations concerning the tunnel, leaving the matter in the hands of a joint commission. Failure on the part of the English company holding the contract for the work to receive sufficient funds resulted in the failure of the enterprise in 1880. Now the project is receiving some attention, a better feeling having been established between the people of the two countries.

I did not comb her hair very often, her head was too sore to comb it, and when I did comb, it came out in bunches. Some nights her head itched so bad she could not sleep.
