KING OF WILD BULLS.

ndia's Gaur Combines Courage and Audacity With Great Strength.

The gaur is often wrongly termed 'bison." The name is not correct; the bison is the bos bonassus of Lithuania and the Caucasus. The gaur, found in Indo-China, is certainly the finest of all the wild bulls; he overawes all opponents by his courage, audacity and great strength.

He is a huge beast and sometimes measures six feet to the root of the tail. He is distinguished from all other wild cattle by the prominent hump between the two horns. The latter are massive, flat at the base, and ringed, and they describe a very wide curve from the root upward.

The coat is of an olive brown tint, shading in black, with very short, fine hair.

The gaur is found both in the forest and on the mountains, for, in spite of his great size, he is extremely agile, so that he can run up the mountain slopes and climb the rocks with ease.

Like the elephant, he feeds on grass and plants, and when he cannot get these he falls back on bamboo shoots and the buds and branches of trees.

The gaurs feed until about 9 o'clock in the morning; then they return to the bamboo forests and clearings to sleep.

Seacoast Defenses.

It seems rather odd, come to think about it, that all of our big coast defense rifles are only available to shoot at an enemy coming in from sea. In their rear they are without protection and would require an army to protect them against invaders who might climb over the back fence after us. These big guns have a horizontal swing of only about ten degrees azimuth.

Wouldn't it be wise to so make these big shooting irons that they could be swung clear around the circle, so that they could defend themselves, so to speak? We could then load 'em with broken up stove plate, bolts, newspaper jokes, family portraits and various junk

French Officers Are III Paid. The poorest men in France are the army officers.
