DON'T GET INTO DEBT

ON A RENTED FARM

Get into the dairy business on your farm. I can put you in touch with the owners of fine prairie lands of rich soil, from 300 to 400 miles west of Omaha, which can be bought on easy terms at from $15 to $40 per acre. You are sure to make money by modern dairy practice, because the silo is the solution of the dairy problem and feed crops are heavy on these lands. If you haven't money at first to build a silo, dig one. Good farmers with proper equipment and feed can secure cows on time.

These owners make these special terms to dairy farmers, because they know that a good dairy farmer will make money by corn-dairy farming and will soon clean up his obligations. Then hogs and poultry fit in and round out the profits. These 160-acre tracts are located among improved farms in established communities.

Give me your name; let me help you become the owner of a dairy farm, no matter whether you want to buy one on easy terms in Nebraska or Eastern Colorado, or whether you want to homestead a 320-acre Mondell tract in Wyoming.

Nebraska's Opportunity.

The fact that Nebraska can grow corn and alfalfa at less cost than almost any other state in the Union makes it possible for Nebraskans to take advantage of the high price of meat. Ten years of experimental work at the Nebraska Experiment Station has proved that beef can be produced at a lower cost on some combination of the corn plant and alfalfa than any other food combination available in the state. A large amount of data have been obtained on the comparative value of cattle foods and may be had upon application for bulletins Nos. 116 and 132 of the Bulletin department, University Farm, Lincoln.

How to Grow Good Potatoes.

Much information regarding the varieties, planting, treatment of seed for scab and other diseases, and the care of the potato crop may be obtained from the bulletin department of the University Farm, Lincoln.

Young people of the state who belong to the Boy's and Girl's Potatoe clubs of the state should send for extension bulletin No. 12, a general treatise on the growing of potatoes. Press bulletin No. 40 entitled "Potatoe Pointers" is also valuable.

THE FRUGAL PAST

A Pair of Trousers Went a Long Way In the Good Old Days.

WAIL OF A MAN IN A GROUCH.

His Wife's Reckless Gift to a Tramp of One of His Battered Castoff Garments Moved Him to a Touching Discourse on the Vice of Extravagance.

"A poor man came to the door this afternoon and asked if I had any old clothes I could spare," said Mrs. Jamesworthy. "I gave him those gray trousers of yours, as they were too badly worn out for you to use them again. They were all faded and full of holes." "The next time you undertake to distribute my raiment among the proletariat, Mrs. Jamesworthy," returned her grouchy husband, "you might at least consult me. You are assuming altogether too much when you take it for granted that I am done with a pair of trousers. As things are going now in the business world I find it expedient to wear such garments so long as there is any way to fasten my suspenders to them.

"Times are growing worse and worse, and the financial stringency is breaking all records, and the man who strives to support his family has troubles enough without coming home to find that the wife of his bosom has given his purple and fine linen to some body's wandering boy.

"I had expected to get two seasons' wear out of those trousers, and I had a sentimental fondness for them, as I wore those trousers on that red letter day when, three years ago, I stood in the White House and proudly shook hands with the illustrious president of this great and glorious republic. I hoped to hand them down to my children's children, so that when I am cold in my grave they might contemplate those historic trousers with streaming eyes and recall the glorious occasion I have referred to. Now I no longer have a souvenir of my meeting with the president, and posterity is robbed of a great privilege by reason of your heedless course.

"I'd never think of giving away anything of yours without your approval, Mrs. Jamesworthy. Time and again I have been tempted to call in some poor but respectable widow with a large family to support and give her your false hair, which has become an eyesore to me, as I find it lying around wherever I go, but I felt it would be doing you an injustice and refrained. Yet when an unknown hobo comes to our door asking for refreshments you hand him my cherished trousers, which are more to me than pride of ancestry or pomp of power.

"Your action is a fair sample of the extravagance which keeps men forever walking in the shadow of the parlorhouse. I have no doubt that my sainted mother would roll over in her grave if she could know of such doings. Under her wise and skillful management my father had a chance to accumulate a few plasters for his old age. He wore his trousers until they were full of holes; then my mother took them and half soled them and made them as good as new, and he wore them for another term of years until it was impossible to tell what their original color might have been.

"When they were too far gone for further use mother made them over so the older son could wear them, and when he had used them five or six years there still was enough sound material in them to make a pair for the youngest son. I was that youngest son, and all through my boyhood and even in early manhood I was wearing expurgated editions of my father's trousers.

"You may make as many faces as you please, Mrs. Jamesworthy, and point the finger of scorn until the cows come home, but that doesn't change the fact that it was economy of this sort that kept our parents in ignorance of such things as the bankruptcy court and the associated charities. When I had worn those historic trousers for a few summers and winters, until they would answer the purpose no longer, my mother cut them up into strips and made rag carpets of them, and those rag carpets were more sensible and more serviceable than the tailor made affairs you have strewn over these floors.

"After this, please, you will call me into executive session before giving away any of my habiliments, Mrs. Jamesworthy."—Walt Mason in Chicago News.

Concrete Bells.
The peculiar vibratory or nonvibratory properties of concrete are strikingly shown in bells made of this material. A bell cast in concrete will ring almost like a metal bell, but a slight touch of the hand serves immediately to stop vibration and the resulting sound. This is due to the lack of homogeneity from the standpoint of sound transmission.—London Standard.

On the Go.
"My husband is not home two nights a month."
"You should get the minister to see him."
"He is the minister—always being called away to see people."—Kansas City Journal.

When you don't need any help it is wonderful how many people are eager to come to your assistance.—Philadelphia Record.
