The first snow of the season arrived last night and today. Snow fell to the depth of several inches. A little sleet before the snow made walking very difficult.

A representative of the Britt Chautauqua of Lincoln was in the city last week interviewing our business men with a view to having the Britt chautauqua here the coming summer. We understand that enough pledges were secured to insure that it will be put on.

Local news matter is a little scarce this week as the live merchants have taken most of our space to tell the people of the wonderful bargains they have in their several establishments. December is the newspaperman's harvest and advertisements take the place of local matter.

The republican national convention will be held in Chicago the first week in July, or a week ahead of the democratic convention, which will be held in St. Louis. There are numerous candidates for the republican nomination, evidently figuring that the chances of success are good.
